TITLE II—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs and activities of the Bureau of Reclamation. Additional items of conference agreement are discussed below.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

GENERAL INVESTIGATIONS

Amendment No. 46: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $13,221,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $13,221,000 for General Investigations instead of $12,926,000 as proposed by the House and $12,521,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement includes $200,000 to continue advance planning for the Prairie Bend Unit, Nebraska. These funds will permit the Bureau of Reclamation to supplement the existing planning report/draft environmental impact statement to incorporate features of the project desired by local interests.

CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Amendment No. 47: Appropriates $642,897,000 for the Construction Program instead of $649,697,000 as proposed by the House and $641,027,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Both the House and Senate versions of the bill provided $250,000 for the Bureau of Reclamation to begin a cost-shared feasibility study of water and power benefits to be derived at Auburn, California, from expanding a Corps of Engineers flood control dam.

However, in response to communication with other Members of Congress, Committee members subsequently agreed to recommend that the Bureau of Reclamation proceed with a study of a complete multipurpose dam versus expansion of a pre-existing flood control dam, provided certain key requirements were squarely met and assurances to that effect were obtained from authoritative officials in the Administration.

These conditions were: that proceeding with the Bureau multipurpose study would not delay or hinder progress on the flood control project in any way; that the Bureau study comply fully with all principles and guidelines applicable to water resources projects for compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act; and that these studies be completed in sufficient time to allow realistically for congressional authorization of flood protection by October of 1992.

On October 4, 1990, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and the Commissioner of Reclamation provided letters to Congress which did pledge to proceed with each study separately so that the Bureau study would not delay the Corps' study, which expressed the hope but not the certainty that the Bureau study could be completed in time for authorization by October of 1992, and which said that principles and guidelines would be followed in some but not all of the respects stipulated. Specifically, the letter from the OMB made no reference and no commitment at all to principles and guidelines governing feasibility reports and environmental compliance. The letter from the Commissioner of Reclamation said that principles and guidelines are necessary only for a document termed "a current economic analysis."

The Commissioner's letter said that compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act required only an "updating" of previous environmental documentation and that in view of a previous authorization for an Auburn project, the original feasibility study requires only updating also. It is not clear from the letter what standards the Commissioner intends such updating of environmental and feasibility documentation must meet, but the letter avoided applying full principles and guidelines to them.

In view of the controversy surrounding the multipurpose project, the serious threat to many thousands of people from floods in the American River watershed, the considerable changes in Auburn Dam's design since its original authorization and the probable reconfiguration of project benefits, it is the view of the conferees that the feasibility and environmental impact studies must be thorough and in accordance with the principles and guidelines which apply to such studies for any water resources project. Further, in accordance with the commitments received by Congress from the Office of Management and Budget and the Bureau of Reclamation, such study shall not delay the efforts of the Corps of Engineers to complete activities associated with "expandable" flood control only dam at Auburn.

The conference agreement includes an additional $3,500,000 for the Central Arizona Project (CAP) as proposed by the House. These funds are to be used to protect the Town of Marana against increased flood and erosion damages caused by a CAP siphon outlet and canal within the Santa Cruz River floodplain. In addition, this project would protect the siphon outlet and canal from overtopping and erosion during flood flows on the Santa Cruz River. The conferees direct the Bureau of Reclamation to enter into an intergovernmental agreement with the Pima County, Arizona Department of Transportation and Flood Control District to transfer these funds to the County for the purpose of conducting this necessary protection work. The cost of this protection work will be nonreimbursable.

The conferees urge the Bureau of Reclamation to reprogram funds to continue safety of dams modifications at Mormon Island Auxiliary Dam (Folsom Dam and related facilities).

Amendment No. 48: Provides that $185,768,000 shall be available for transfer to the Lower Colorado River Basin Development Fund as proposed by the House instead of $182,268,000 as proposed by the Senate.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

In fiscal year 1989, the Bureau of Reclamation began an effort to reduce the backlog of maintenance at its projects. The Congress has supported and continues to support that effort; however, due to the budgetary situation the conference agreement provides for a reduction of $10,000,000 below the budget request.

In the Bureau of Reclamation's operation and maintenance appropriation, costs of $2,800,000 are estimated for Kesterson Reservoir monitoring, research and office support activities. The Secretary of the Interior is directed to review the Department's repayment policies with respect to Kesterson and other drainage related costs with input from the Congress, state and local agencies, and the public and to submit a report on this policy, no later than March 31, 1991, to the appropriate Committees of the House and Senate. Recommendations on past and future cost allocations between Federal and non-Federal interests as well as recommendations on cost allocations between reimbursable and nonreimbursable functions shall be included in such report. No portion of Kesterson and other drainage related costs shall be recovered from non-Federal entities until a cost allocation formula has been established in accordance with this report. However, the appropriate non-Federal share of the $2,800,000 included in this appropriation shall be recovered by the conclusion of fiscal year 1991, pursuant to the recommended cost allocation formula.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Amendment No. 49: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 205. (a) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary is authorized and directed to enter into a contract with the McGee Creek Authority, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, accepting a payment in an amount to be determined by the Secretary after appropriate investigation.

(b) CONTRACT TERMINATION.—Upon receipt of the payment specified in subsection (a), the McGee Creek Water Authority's obligation under contract between the Authority and the Secretary numbered 0-07-50-X0822, dated October 11, 1979, shall be terminated.

(c) TITLE TO PROJECT FACILITIES.—Notwithstanding any payments made by the McGee Creek Water Authority pursuant to section 205 (a) and (b) of this language or pursuant to any contract with the Secretary, title to project facilities of the McGee Creek Project, Oklahoma, shall remain with the United States.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement restores House language stricken by the Senate relating to repayment for the McGee Creek, Oklahoma, project amended to provide that the amount of repayment is to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

Amendment No. 50: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 206. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, none of the funds appropriated in this or any other Act shall be used to execute new long-term contracts for water supply from the Central Valley Project, California.

(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to enter into the following contracts: (A) a municipal and industrial water supply contract with the Sacramento County Water Agency, not to exceed 22,000 acre-feet annually, to meet the immediate needs of Sacramento County and a municipal and industrial water supply contract with the San Juan Suburban Water District, not to exceed 13,000 acre-feet annually, for diversion from Folsom Lake, with annual quantities delivered under these contracts to be determined by the Secretary based upon the quantity of water actually needed within the Sacramento County Water Agency service area and San Juan Suburban Water District after considering reasonable efforts to: (i) promote full utilization of existing water entitlements within Sacramento County, (ii) implement water conservation and metering programs within the areas served by the contract, and (iii) implement programs to maximize to the extent feasible conjunctive use of surface water and groundwater; and (B) a municipal and industrial water supply contract with the El Dorado County Water Agency, not to exceed 15,000 acre-feet annually, for diversion from Folsom Lake or for exchange upstream on the American River or its tributaries, considering reasonable efforts to implement water conservation programs within areas to be served by the contracts. The contracts required by this subsection are intended as the first phase of a contracting program to meet the long-term water supply needs of Sacramento and El Dorado Counties. The Secretary shall promptly initiate the necessary analysis for the long-term water supply contracts. The Secretary shall include in these contracts terms and conditions to ensure that the contracts may be amended in any respect required to meet the Secretary's obligations under applicable state law and the Federal environmental laws.

(2) Prior to entering into the contracts specified in subsection (b)(1) of this section, the Secretary is directed to comply with the provision of the National Environmental Policy Act by preparing joint Environmental Impact Statements and California Environmental Quality Act Environmental Impact Reports. The Sacramento County Water Agency shall be the joint lead agency with the Bureau of Reclamation in the preparation of the environmental documents required under (b)(1)(A) of this section and the El Dorado County Water Agency shall be the joint lead agency with the Bureau of Reclamation in the preparation of the environmental documents required under (b)(1)(B), with the Bureau of Reclamation cooperating in all aspects of the environmental review process, but not controlling that process.

(3) Diversions from the American River under the contract for the Sacramento County Water Agency shall, to the maximum extent reasonable and feasible, take place at or near the mouth of the American River.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees note that the lower American River is a valuable resource which provides not only needed water supplies and significant flood control for Sacramento, but which also fosters numerous instream, public trust and wild and scenic river resources. As a consequence, diversions from the American River, to the maximum extent reasonable and feasible, should be undertaken at points at or near the mouth of the American River and upstream diversions should be subject to applicable flow requirements that may be established from time to time. For these reasons, the conferees believe that the Bureau of Reclamation's operation of facilities on the American River should protect these instream, public trust and wild and scenic river values to the maximum extent reasonable and feasible.

Amendment No. 51: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate that authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay, without reimbursement, $1,000,000 to the Fall River Rural Electric Cooperative as reimbursement for environmental protection requirements in connection with the development of hydroelectric power at the Island Park Dam and Reservoir, Idaho, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the section number named in said amendment, insert: "207"

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

TITLE III—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

The summary tables at the end of this title set forth the conference agreement with respect to the individual appropriations, programs and activities of the Department of Energy. Additional items of conference agreement are discussed below.

OVERHEAD TAXES

The conferees are concerned about the Department of Energy's increased use of overhead taxes and indirect charges which reduce funds available for specific energy, science, and national security programs approved by the Congress. Currently, overhead taxes are being applied for purposes such as independent research and development; occupational safety and health activities; environmental remediation; science, math and education programs; and technology transfer. It is not possible to determine the exact amount of these indirect charges from the Department's existing budget justifications. The conferees direct the Department to submit as part of the FY 1992 budget a description of all overhead taxes or indirect charges which will be made against direct programs during the year, the total amount of the tax, the percentage applied to the direct program, and a justification for each program funded by indirect charges or overhead taxes.

EPA REIMBURSEMENT

The conferees note that there have been proposals which would direct the Secretary of Energy to reimburse the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) for costs necessary to ensure oversight by EPA of environmental response actions at Department of Energy (DOE) facilities.

Funding for defense activities in the FY 1991 budget must be used to maintain the national security as well as begin to address environmental restoration and cleanup activities at DOE facilities across the nation. To permit an open-ended reimbursement policy by the EPA could severely hamper other important national security activities. In addition, these proposals would permit EPA to augment the funds provided through the Congressional appropriations process for specific EPA functions. EPA could arbitrarily increase spending for personnel and initiate programs with little or no oversight by cognizant Congressional Committees.

Permitting a policy of reimbursement of the EPA for performing its mandated oversight functions does not save money. This approach merely buries the cost of EPA oversight in myriad government programs, makes it difficult to track the actual cost of environmental cleanup activities, and complicates Congressional oversight of EPA programs and personnel. The conferees expect EPA to request adequate resources during the appropriations process to fully fund personnel and programs needed to carry out its mission.

INDEPENDENT RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

The conferees are concerned about the Department's management of the laboratory-directed research and development program and the lack of uniformity in the policy applied at various Departmental laboratories. The Department is directed to develop a policy which will improve the oversight and accountability of this program and ensure that the guidelines are followed consistently by each laboratory. The Secretary of Energy is to provide to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations his procedures for implementing these recommendations.

Additionally, the Department's FY 1992 budget and future budget submissions should identify the amount of independent research and development funds, the location of the funds, and a justification of the funding.

ENERGY SUPPLY, RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 52: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $2,527,082,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $2,527,082,000 for Energy Supply, Research and Development Activities instead of $2,745,615,000 as proposed by the Senate and $2,703,272,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 53: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted, insert the following: $89,842,500 shall be available only for the following facilities: Advanced Technology Center, Indiana State University; Center for Energy Resources Management, University of New Orleans; Biomedical Research Facility, University of Alabama at Birmingham; Biomedical Research Facility, Case Western Reserve University; Energy Science Research Facility at Boston College; Center for Nuclear Medicine Research in Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders, Health Sciences Center, West Virginia University; Gazes Cardiac Research Institute, Medical University of South Carolina; Biomedical Research Institute, Louisiana State University Medical Center, Shreveport, Louisiana; the Neurosensory Research Center, Oregon Health Sciences University; and the Physical Sciences Center, Fort Hays State University, Fort Hays, Kansas

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate earmarking funds for the Hydrogen Energy Systems Program. In addition, the conference agreement restores language proposed by the House and amended by the Senate providing funds for specified projects.

Amendment No. 54: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: Provided further, That of the amount appropriated herein, $5,500,000 shall be available only for the Boron Neutron Capture Therapy research program at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory and $7,500,000 shall be available only for the modification and operation of the Power Burst Facility at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, and the Secretary of Energy is directed to obligate and expend funds for those activities prior to the end of the fiscal year 1991.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement provides for the specific funding of the Boron Neutron Capture Therapy research program.

SOLAR AND RENEWABLE ENERGY

Photovoltaic energy systems.—The conferees provide $2,000,000 for a utility/industry power project using monolithic amorphous silicon-photovoltaic modules and $300,000 is included to assist industry in the integration of SERI tested thin film modules into the design and construction of grid-connected buildings as proposed by the House. Funds are not included to continue the Southeast and Southwest regional experiment stations.

Biofuels energy systems.—The conferees provide $4,500,000 for short rotation woody crops as proposed by the House and $4,500,000 for the regional biofuels program as proposed by the Senate.

Wind energy systems.—The conferees provide that from the total funds available for wind energy research, $1,500,000 is to be made available for the Renewable Energy Research Center program at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Ocean energy systems. —Under the Ocean Energy account, the conferees have provided $2,750,000 for the PICHTR-OTEC project. Not less than $2,250,000 of the PICHTR-OTEC funds shall be made available directly to the organization established by the State of Hawaii pursuant to section 3 of Act 152 of the 1983 Hawaii Legislative Session.

Geothermal.—The conferees provide for the projects as described in the House and Senate reports except that funding for the Fenton Hill project is limited to the budget and $1,500,000 shall be available for the Department to cooperate with industry efforts to maintain production at The Geysers geothermal field.

The conferees agree to provide $5,000,000 to continue the Hawaii geothermal resource verification and characterization project as described in the Senate report.

Electric energy systems and storage.—The conferees provide for the projects as described by the House and Senate reports except that $2,500,000 is included for the thermal energy storage research program. This latter effort includes both diurnal and industrial thermal energy storage and seasonal energy storage to help ensure that research and development support for U.S. firms will maintain international competitiveness in this important energy storage program.

Any reductions that are made to the Electric Energy Systems account as a result of congressional action are to be applied in such a manner so as to not disproportionally reduce the funding for the high temperature superconducting pilot centers at Argonne, Los Alamos and Oak Ridge National Laboratories.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

The conferees direct the Secretary of Energy to develop a plan to implement the cooperative research, development and demonstration project of Spent Nuclear Fuel Dual Purpose (Storage and Transportation) Casks described in House Report 101-536 under Nuclear Energy Programs.

Such plan, which shall be submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations no later than March 31, 1991, shall include a recommendation to ensure the full Federal funding of the project in fiscal years 1992 and 1993.

The conferees provide for an increase of $10,000,000 over the budget request for the Argonne National Laboratory (ANL) in Idaho for the integral fast reactor program. An additional $3,000,000 is included for the Advanced Liquid Metal Reactor program.

The conferees have included $33,500,000 for the space and defense power systems. Budget constraints continue to require that other departments and agencies come up with their fair share of the costs of these activities.

The conferees agree with the Senate report concerning groundwater contamination at the Falls City, Texas, site.

The conferees provide $7,000,000 of the amended request to permit the Institute of Nuclear Power Operations to evaluate the safety of civilian reactors in the Soviet Union.

The conferees provide $6,000,000 of the amended request to provide for the Office of Nuclear Safety.

SAFETY AND HEALTH

The conferees provide $7,000,000 of the amended request to fund the Office of Health and study air pollution in Mexico City.

BIOLOGICAL AND ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH

The conferees provide for activities as described in the House and Senate reports with the following exceptions.

The conferees provide $65,900,000 for Global Warming Research, including $9,000,000 for the National Institute of Global Environmental Change.

The conferees provide for a total of $22,200,000 for the energy biosciences program through competitive grants under Supporting Research and Technical Analysis as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees agree that project 87-R-130, Institute of Nuclear Medicine, New Jersey, may proceed with construction in New Jersey at or near the Newark campus of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey provided that the facility will be available for cooperative research with federal laboratories such as DOE, university clinical and laboratory researchers, including the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey, and local and community hospitals.

The conferees recommend that the Department of Energy solicit competitive proposals to fund up to seven hospital-based, multi-disciplinary medical university demonstration projects and establish them as Centers of Excellence for Laser Medical Applications. Funds to provide for up to $750,000 to each Center for planning and development costs have been provided, with total funding not to exceed $1,500,000, and the conferees expect a report no later than 120 days following enactment of the Act detailing funding plans, and overview of a program to carry out the use of this very hopeful, innovative and cost-effective technology.

The conferees are cognizant of a National Biomedical Tracer Facility (NBTF) Planning Study which is to be completed by the U.S. Department of Energy in cooperation with the nuclear medicine community. The Secretary of Energy is to report the findings of the NBTF Planning Study to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees.

MAGNETIC FUSION

The conferees note recent scientific progress in the fusion program. The Department of Energy is conducting an extensive review of the scope and direction of the Magnetic Fusion program. This review is scheduled for completion this fall.

Because of severe budget constraints, the conferees agree to provide $275,300,000 for the fusion program. In order to provide the Department with the flexibility to develop a meaningful program, the conferees are recommending that these funds be provided without further allocation between program components, projects, and activities within the fusion program.

SUPPORTING RESEARCH AND TECHNICAL ANALYSIS

The conferees provide for activities as described in the House and Senate reports with the following exceptions.

The conferees provide that from within the Department's expanding education programs not less than $2,000,000 shall be available for EPSCoR planning grants and $2,000,000 for Graduate Traineeship EPSCoR funding.

The conferees provide $5,000,000 to be made available, on a competitive basis, to university nuclear engineering programs. These monies are to be made available for graduate fellowships, direct research support, and educational support programs in the field of nuclear engineering.

The conferees provide $22,200,000 through competitive grants for the energy biosciences program.

Within available funds of the Department of Energy, $200,000 shall be made available for Rural Enterprises, Inc., a tax-exempt, non-profit technology transfer center in Oklahoma, to continue a technology transfer demonstration project for the Department of Energy that will attempt to draw prime candidates for transfer to other private and public sector entities, put a system in place for drawing upon these resources, and transfer DOE technologies to private and public sector entities.

From within funds made available in applied mathematical sciences, basic energy sciences, and other energy programs in this account not otherwise discussed in this report, an amount equal to the fiscal year 1990 amount is to be made available to continue the cooperative agreement between the Department of Energy and the Supercomputer Computations Research Institute (SCRI) located at Florida State University. However, if deemed beneficial for the program, the DOE and FSU may mutually agree to adjust the support to be made available to not less than 83% of the FY 1990 amount. DOE and FSU shall work toward normalizing the SCRI support within the DOE budget. The conferees continue to be impressed by the contributions of SCRI to high performance computing in the U.S.

The conferees continue to support the construction of the 6-7 GeV Synchrotron Radiation Source at the Argonne National Laboratory. However, because of severe budget constraints the conferees have reduced the requested increase in funding, providing a total funding of $70,000,000 in FY 1991.

The conferees agree that the Department of Energy may utilize the funds provided in fiscal year 1990 for the operation of the Advanced Technology Research Center at Oklahoma State University, which can be matched by local and private funds, for the construction of such Center.

The conferees have not made any specific allocation of funds for x-ray lithography.

EDUCATION PROGRAMS

The conferees have provided a reduction of $50,000,000 to the Energy Supply, Research and Development program for non-defense education programs. The Department has a large number of ongoing and new initiatives dealing with scientific and energy related education programs. The conferees are supportive of these programs and note that these education programs support the Department's defense mission equally with its other scientific programs. Accordingly, the conferees have provided $50,000,000 to fund education programs in the Atomic Energy Defense Activities appropriation consistent with proposals contained in the authorizing legislation.

ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND WASTE MANAGEMENT (NON-DEFENSE)

The conferees strongly support the Department's efforts to deal with the environment and waste problems at its facilities. However, because of budget restrictions, the conferees have reduced the increase in funding for this program by $50,000,000. This reduction is accomplished by increasing the Department's account for unidentified slippage in programs.

The conferees have included $84,000,000 for the operation of the Fast Flux Test Facility (FFTF), endorse the establishment of the FFTF as a user complex, and encourage the Department to enter into long-term agreements with non-Federal entities (including foreign governments and entities, and municipalities) to use the facility for commercial research as well as isotope and steam production. The agreements should be consistent with DOE contracting practices and allow for the Department to charge for the use of the facility. The Department should cooperate with the State of Washington to thoroughly assess the domestic and foreign commercial market potential for services and products which FFTF can provide and to identify options for providing such services. The conferees direct that the Department spend sufficient funds within the FY 1991 FFTF operating monies for the purpose of exploring marketing opportunities.

URANIUM SUPPLY AND ENRICHMENT ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 55: Appropriates $1,340,018,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $1,406,018,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 56: Appropriates revenues of $1,450,400,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $1,530,500,000 as proposed by the House.

The conferees note that appropriations for uranium enrichment are intended to include costs necessary for transfer of technology for alternate applications.

The conferees agree with the funding for Uranium Supply and Enrichment Activities as provided by the Senate which reflects the amendments to the budget submitted by the Administration.

The conferees direct the Department of Energy to reprogram/transfer funds for Nuclear Energy Research and Development and facility cleanup as requested in letters to the committees dated April 30, 1990, and May 31, 1990.

GENERAL SCIENCE

Because of severe budget restraints, the conferees agree to a $50,000,000 reduction to the General Science appropriation, excluding the superconducting super collider, as may be determined by the Secretary.

The conferees agree with the Department's proposed allocation to initiate fabrication of the Gammasphere facility and take note of the proposed siting of the Gammasphere at the Holifield heavy-ion accelerator at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory. The conferees expect that the Department shall maintain the operation of each of the three heavy-ion accelerators at the national laboratories (Atlas at Argonne National Laboratory, the 88-inch Cyclotron at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, and the Holifield) with funds allocated in the Nuclear Physics budget.

SUPERCONDUCTING SUPER COLLIDER

Because of severe budget restraints, the conferees agree to a $75,000,000 reduction to the Superconducting Super Collider. The conferees recognize the critical importance of the SSC for the Nation and for advancing knowledge in the key area of high energy physics.

The conferees agree to remove the restriction on $25,000,000 in construction funds that was imposed in the reports on the FY 1990 appropriation.

In order to keep the program on schedule, and to assure that reductions in appropriated amounts do not result in an increase in the overall cost of the project, conferees encourage the State of Texas to make available in FY 1991 sufficient amounts to meet the anticipated program requirements during FY 1991.

The SSC is crucial to maintaining U.S. scientific leadership. However, the conferees have a number of concerns that have yet to be addressed by the Department of Energy. The Department of Energy has yet to provide, as promised, an updated estimate of the total cost of the SSC. The Department is encouraged to complete the cost estimate immediately. Also of continued concern is the Department's progress in securing firm foreign commitments to the SSC. While the conferees are aware that contributions of this nature take significant time to develop, the Department is encouraged to accelerate the process.

NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL FUND

Amendment No. 57: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For nuclear waste disposal activities to carry out the purposes of Public Law 97-425, as amended, including the acquisition of real property or facility construction or expansion, $242,833,000, to remain available until expended, to be derived from the Nuclear Waste Fund. To the extent that balances in the fund are not sufficient to cover amounts available for obligation in the account, the Secretary shall exercise his authority pursuant to section 302(e)(5) of said Act to issue obligations to the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated, within available funds, not to exceed $4,146,000, may be provided to the State of Nevada, for the conduct of its oversight responsibilities pursuant to the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982, Public Law 97-425, as amended, $622,000 is to be available for the University of Nevada, Reno for infrastructure studies related to nuclear waste, and $207,000 is to be available to the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, to carry out transportation studies related to nuclear waste: Provided further, That not more than $4,892,000, may be provided to affected local governments, as defined in the Act, to conduct appropriate activities pursuant to the Act: Provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated may be used directly or indirectly to influence legislative action on any matter pending before Congress or a State legislature or for any lobbying activity as provided in 18 U.S.C. 1913: Provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated may be used for litigation expenses: Provided further, That of the amount appropriated herein, up to $4,146,000 shall be available for infrastructure studies and other research and development work to be carried out by the University of Nevada, Las Vegas (UNLV) and the University of Nevada, Reno.

In paying the amounts determined to be appropriate as a result of the decision in Consolidated Edison Company of New York v. Department of Energy, 870 F.2d 694 (D.C. Cir. 1989), the Department of Energy shall pay interest at a rate to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury and calculated from the date the amounts were deposited into the Nuclear Waste Fund. Such payments may be made by credits to future utility payments into the fund.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement provides $242,833,000 for nuclear waste disposal activities and provides certain direction with regard to the implementation of the Nuclear Waste Disposal Fund.

ATOMIC ENERGY DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

Amendment No. 58: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $10,914,014,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement provides $10,914,014,000 for Atomic Energy Defense Activities instead of $10,915,148,000 as proposed by the House and $10,980,258,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees agree that accomplishing R&D in the weapons program outside the National Laboratories creates problems because of the highly classified nature of the program. The conferees understand that the Rochester Institute of Technology is a high caliber institution conducting work in microelectronic engineering and imaging sciences. The Department is urged to consider use of this facility in accomplishing this type of work in the weapons program.

Pending a review of the 5-year budget plan to be submitted by the Secretary of Energy detailing long-term plans for funding programs and projects of the national security programs for the Department of Energy, the conferees agree to defer without prejudice funding for Project 88-D-105, the Special Nuclear Materials R&D Laboratory Replacement.

The Senate report contains language concerning the use of funds for the acquisition of a supercomputer subject to approval by the Secretary of Energy and under such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate. The House bill or report did not address this matter. In lieu of the Senate report language, the conferees agree that any supercomputer procured by the Department of Energy through the expenditure of funds appropriated by this Act shall be procured in a competitive and nondiscriminatory manner, as required by the Competition in Contracting Act, and as provided in the recently concluded U.S.-Japan Trade Agreement regarding government procurement of supercomputers.

The conferees agree to provide the budget request of $4,980,000 for the Marshall Islands radiological activities.

The conferees agree to provide within available funds for the Inertial Confinement Fusion program, $8,500,000 to upgrade the OMEGA laser at the University of Rochester, $10,000,000 to upgrade the NOVA laser at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, and note that the Naval Research Laboratory program is to be funded at the level included in the budget request. Also, the request of $10,000,000 for target development, production, and delivery is included as proposed in the budget.

The conferees agree with the House report language regarding the report requirement for the Environmental Restoration and Waste Management program. The Department of Energy should ensure that the report will be a useful document clearly outlining performance versus planned milestones for the program.

Consistent with direction provided by the House and Senate Armed Services Committees during deliberations on the FY 1991 National Defense Authorization Act, the conferees have deleted funds for the following activities: Nuclear Directed Energy Weapons Capital Equipment, $11,250,000; Project 88-D-106, Nuclear Directed Energy Research Facility, $5,000,000; and Project 89-D-125, Plutonium Recovery Modification Project, $65,000,000.

The conferees agree that the Department's Nuclear Directed Energy Weapons (NDEW) program is an integral part of the activities performed in the core research and development weapons program. Accordingly, $90,654,000 associated with NDEW has been provided as part of research and development operating expenses.

The conference agreement provides that all funding for the program direction and management functions for the Environmental Restoration and Waste Management program be included as part of the defense function. The Department had proposed this as part of the non-defense environmental restoration program, but since more than 80 percent of the program is funded within the Atomic Energy Defense Activities account, the conferees chose to realign the program direction activity with the majority of the funds.

The conference agreement moves $50,000,000 of science, mathematics, and engineering education programs to the Atomic Energy Defense Activities account from the Energy Supply, Research and Development account. This program will ensure that technical and scientific workers are available in the future to accomplish the national security mission of the Department.

Amendment No. 59: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: , except for $15,000,000 in operating expenses for nonsite specific design activities and activities in support of ongoing preparation of the Environmental Impact Statement, subject to authorization: Provided further, That no funds in this Act shall be available for Project 89-D-125, Plutonium Recovery Modification Project (PRMP), until authorizing legislation therefore is enacted into law

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement provides that $15,000,000 in operating expenses may be used for nonsite specific design activities and activities in support of ongoing preparation of the Environmental Impact Statement for a plutonium processing facility.

Amendment No. 60: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that earmarked specific funding for the verification and control technology program, deleted funding for the Nuclear Depth/Strike Bomb, and limited funding for production and surveillance operating expenses and weapons testing program operating expenses.

Amendment No. 61: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that transferred $500,000 to the Tennessee Valley Authority for environmental monitoring activities.

The conferees agree that not to exceed $500,000 of the amount appropriated for environmental restoration and waste management may be transferred to the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) to assist the Department of Energy (DOE) in assessing and monitoring areas and activities within or adjacent to Watts Bar Reservoir, Tennessee, which may be adversely affected by radioactive, mercury, or other contaminants resulting from runoff from DOE facilities within the State of Tennessee. The TVA and DOE should determine the scope of assessment and monitoring activities to be undertaken, and TVA shall make available to the DOE, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Army Corps of Engineers, and the State of Tennessee, all findings and information related to such activities. TVA should request funding as part of its FY 1992 budget request if it seeks to continue this activity in the future.

POWER MARKETING ADMINISTRATIONS

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

The conferees agree to provide an additional increment of $326,900,000 in new borrowing authority for system development and maintenance, energy conservation, fish and wildlife, and capital equipment. Of this amount, $136,600,000 is available only for the Third Alternating Current Intertie. This amount will fully fund the proposed Third A.C. Intertie requirements in FY 1991. The conferees deleted proposed borrowing authority of $32,600,000 for other capital investments and $15,800,000 for maintenance/replacement work as provided by the Senate.

The conferees are very concerned that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) is continuing to request Federal borrowing authority for all capital needs. Compared to other large utilities, BPA has a high proportion of debt to assets. Continued Federal borrowing has mortgaged BPA's future—the conferees expect BPA to present a realistic budget for FY 1992 which limits the use of Federal borrowing and finances a significant portion of capital additions with revenues.

WESTERN AREA POWER ADMINISTRATION

The conferees note with approval that the investor-owned utilities are seeking the necessary approval of the California Public Utilities Commission to participate in the Harold T. "Bizz" Johnson California-Pacific Intertie Transmission Line, also known as the California-Oregon Transmission Project, and urge the expeditious completion of this process. Should the investor-owned utilities fail to provide the required transmission services, the Administrator of the Western Area Power Administration should develop plans to submit to Congress to provide such facilities that the participants determine are necessary.

FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION

GENERAL PROVISIONS—DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Amendment No. 63: Deletes House language stricken by the Senate directing the Secretary of Energy to use the Corps of Engineers to manage the environmental restoration of the Hanford Site in Richland, Washington.

Amendment No. 64: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to delete the matter proposed by the Senate amendment and on page 3, line 13, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "30,700,000" and insert in lieu thereof "27,200,000"; and on page 14, line 22, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "136,100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "136,100,000, of which $9,500,000 shall be derived from funds appropriated to "General expenses" by Public Law 101-302"; and on page 21, line 8, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "231,516,000" and insert in lieu thereof "221,516,000"; and on page 33, line 13, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "1,273,732,000" and insert in lieu thereof "1,148,732,000"; and on page 35, line 20, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "375,095,000" and insert in lieu thereof "365,095,000"; and on page 36, line 12, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "225,095,000" and insert in lieu thereof "215,095,000"; and on page 46, line 13, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "471,320,000" and insert in lieu thereof "461,320,000"; and on page 47, line 6, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "156,750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "153,450,000"; and on page 47, line 20, of the House engrossed bill, H.R. 5019, strike "314,570,000" and insert in lieu thereof "307,870,000".

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have had to make reductions and other adjustments as a result of the conference report on the Budget Resolution which mandated reductions in the programs funded in this bill. This amendment also deletes Senate language providing a limitation on the use of funds for laboratory-directed research and development.

Amendment No. 66: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate regarding the evaluation of a supercomputing facility.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers of the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5313) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST

Overseas Military Construction.—The conferees agree to make substantial reductions to the Department's request for military construction overseas. The conference agreement reduces the overseas construction request by 79 percent and reduces NATO Infrastructure program by 54 percent. In addition, the House and Senate have respectively supported the Administration's rescission request to cancel projects overseas in the amount of $286,419,000.

The conferees have taken this action because of the great uncertainty regarding forward deployed forces overseas together with the Department's need to develop force and basing plans as a part of its six-year Defense plan. Therefore, the conferees have agreed to fund only critical projects or projects that are the result of a nation-to-nation agreement.

The conferees agree that the Department should critically review its overseas base structure in terms of reduced force goals overseas and the need for more burdensharing by our allies.

Guard and Reserve Programs.—The conferees continue to support facility construction funding for the Guard and Reserve. As a result, the conferees have agreed to provide funding for the Guard and Reserve at about last year's funding level rather than support the Administration's proposed 60 percent reduction. Restoration of this funding level was more than offset by reductions in overseas construction.

On-Going Base Closures.—The conferees understand that the Secretary of Defense plans to issue recommendations for future military base closures and realignments. The conferees note that pursuant to Public Law 100-526, the Secretary is governed by the recommendations of the Base Realignment and Closure Commission, which are legally binding. The conferees expect those recommendations to be carried out in accordance with the timetable established by Public Law 100-526 notwithstanding any subsequent base closing recommendations.

Homeowners Assistance Fund.—The conferees expect that funds from the Base Closure Account can be utilized to support the Homeowners Assistance program for areas impacted by the current base closures recommended by the Base Closure Commission pursuant to Public Law 100-526. The conferees also believe that opportunities may exist to utilize the private sector in the administration of the program in instances where it is demonstrated to be a more cost-effective alternative. The conferees continue to support private sector participation in the Homeowners Assistance program and direct the Department to submit a report by March 1, 1991 to the Committees on Appropriations on actions taken to implement a realistic cost-effective plan for this program which includes private sector participation. The conferees also object to permanent legislation that would provide unlimited transfer authority from funds available to the Department of Defense to fund the Homeowners Assistance program.

Authorization Initiatives.—The conferees note that a number of projects were included in the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991, but were not included by either the House or the Senate during consideration of the Military Construction Appropriations Act. The conferees agree to consider reprogramming requests for any such projects for which authorization is enacted into law.

Matters Addressed by Only One Committee.—The language and allocations set forth in House Report 101-608 and Senate Report 101-410 should be complied with unless specifically addressed to the contrary in this conference report and statement of the managers. Report language included by the House which is not changed by the report of the Senate or the conference, and Senate report language is not changed by the conference is approved by the committee of conference. The statement of the managers, while repeating some report language for emphasis, does not intend to negate the language referred to above unless expressly provided herein. In cases in which the House or the Senate have directed the submission of a report from the Department of Defense, such report is to be submitted to both House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

PROGRAM, PROJECT AND ACTIVITY

For purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177) as amended by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987, (Public Law 100-119), the term "Program, Project and Activity" will continue to be defined as the appropriation account.

Unfortunately the current maintenance facility is outdated and badly in need of replacement. This unit provides valuable support for four units located in Concord and Salisbury, North Carolina. The Committee directs the Department to expedite the design for this maintenance facility so it can be considered for inclusion in the next budget cycle.

MARK O. HATFIELD,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5229) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTIVES

The conferees agree that Executive Branch wishes cannot substitute for Congress' own statements as to the best evidence of Congressional intentions—that is, the official reports of the Congress. Report language included by the House that is not changed by the report of the Senate, and Senate report language that is not changed by the conference is approved by the committee of conference. The statement of the managers, while repeating some report language for emphasis, is not intended to negate the language referred to above unless expressly provided herein.

PROGRAM, PROJECT, AND ACTIVITY

During fiscal year 1991 and any year thereafter, for the purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177), as amended, with respect to funds provided for the Department of Transportation and related agencies, the terms "program, project, and activity" shall mean any item for which a dollar amount is contained in an appropriation Act (including joint resolutions providing continuing appropriations) or accompanying reports of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, or accompanying conference reports and joint explanatory statements of the committee of conference. In addition, the reductions made pursuant to any sequestration order to funds appropriated for "Federal Aviation Administration, Facilities and equipment" and for "Coast Guard, Acquisition, construction, and improvements" shall be applied equally to each "budget item" that is listed under said accounts in the budget justifications submitted to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations as modified by subsequent appropriation Acts and accompanying committee reports, conference reports, or joint explanatory statements of the committee of conference. The conferees recognize that adjustments to the above allocations may be required due to changing program requirements or priorities. The conferees expect any such adjustments, if required, to be accomplished only through the normal reprogramming process.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR POLICY AND INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Amendment No. 1: Appropriates $8,500,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $8,810,000 as proposed by the House.

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR BUDGET AND PROGRAMS

Amendment No. 2: Appropriates $2,390,000 as proposed by the House instead of $2,400,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 3: Provides that not to exceed $40,000 of the appropriation to the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Budget and Programs be used for official reception and representation expenses as proposed by the House instead of $50,000 as proposed by the Senate.

OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 4: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $26,745,000, of which $5,000,000 shall remain available until expended

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

General Purpose ADP Systems.—The conferees agree to all reductions as proposed by the House, and in addition agree to provide $5,000,000 to continue the development of the Departmental Accounting and Financial Information System (DAFIS). This activity was included in the President's budget proposal under the Working Capital Fund (WCF). The conferees agree that funding for development or upgrade of general-purpose automated data processing systems is not an appropriate activity of the WCF; therefore, in future budgets the department is requested to include funding for such items in the appropriation for the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Administration or the appropriate modal accounts. Of the amount provided, $5,000,000 is only available for DAFIS.

Reimbursable Agreements with the Department of Defense.—The conferees share the concern of the House over rising costs being charged to the Department of Transportation by the Department of Defense for reimbursable contract audit work. The DOD, beginning in fiscal year 1990, raised billing rates for such services dramatically based upon an interpretation of the Economy Act (31 U.S.C. 1535). When these rates were appealed, DOD refused to provide a lower rate for federal agencies, stating that "there is no legal authority to waive or reduce part of a rate determined for use in Economy Act transactions". The conferees note that in fiscal year 1990, the Department of Transportation received an estimated $180,000,000 in reimbursable orders from the DOD, and that recent audit reports have indicated that DOT's billing structure for reimbursables may need to be updated. Therefore, the conferees direct the Department of Transportation to review the current billing structure for reimbursables and to revise DOD billing rates based upon actual hourly costs of operation for services rendered, with the intent that the two departments' charges to each other would be based upon the same accounting standards. The DOT is to report its findings and plan of action to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by December 31, 1990.

OFFICE OF COMMERCIAL SPACE TRANSPORTATION

Amendment No. 5: Deletes appropriation of $725,000 proposed by the House. The Senate bill addressed this matter in amendment No. 10.

OFFICE OF ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICE

Amendment No. 6: Appropriates $1,500,000 instead of $1,251,000 as proposed by the House and $1,610,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement provides funding for 23 staff years.

OFFICE OF INTELLIGENCE AND SECURITY

Amendment No. 7: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum named in said amendment, insert the following: $1,200,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees wish to emphasize that the responsibilities of this office are to focus on policy, oversight and coordination, and not research, development or procurement of intelligence and security equipment. Funding has been provided in the Federal Aviation Administration for acquisition of security equipment. It is expected that funds provided herein for the Office of Intelligence and Security will be used solely for personnel and administrative expenses.

TRANSPORTATION PLANNING, RESEARCH, AND DEVELOPMENT

Amendment No. 8: Appropriates $2,947,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $4,777,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 9: Deletes House language that credited to the Transportation planning, research, and development account funds received from space-related user fees. The Senate bill addressed this matter in amendment No. 10.

OFFICE OF COMMERCIAL SPACE TRANSPORTATION

OPERATIONS AND RESEARCH

Amendment No. 10: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

OFFICE OF COMMERCIAL SPACE TRANSPORTATION

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For necessary expenses for operations and research activities related to commercial space transportation, $3,386,000, of which $1,600,000 shall remain available until expended: Provided, That the unexpended balances of the appropriation "Transportation Planning, Research, and Development" associated with commercial space activities shall be transferred to and merged with this appropriation: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, there may be credited up to $300,000 to this account funds received from user fees established for regulatory services.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees agree with the concerns of the House that the planned activities of the Office of Commercial Space Transportation should be scaled back in fiscal year 1991 and that a viable user fee structure should be established without delay. Although funding is provided as a lump sum to allow management flexibility, the conferees note that the recommended level of $3,386,000 is sufficient to fund the entire request of $2,340,000 for the regulatory program of this office as well as $1,046,000 for other activities. The conferees direct that no funds be used to hire personnel above the current full time equivalent level of 23.

PAYMENTS TO AIR CARRIERS

Amendment No. 11: Appropriates $26,600,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $23,600,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 12: Limits obligations to $26,600,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $23,600,000 as proposed by the House.

Payments to Air Carriers.—The conferees agree to provide new budget authority of $26,600,000 for the Essential Air Service (EAS) program as proposed by the Senate instead of $23,600,000 as proposed by the House. In addition, the conferees agree to an obligation limitation of $26,600,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conferees further agree that this program is to be administered in accord with the criteria established for fiscal year 1990, except the agreement allows for points whose subsidy per passenger is greater than $200 and which are located more than 70 miles from the nearest hub airport. The conferees also understand that unobligated balances may be available in addition to the new budget authority provided in this bill. Those prior year funds are not to be used to add additional points into EAS service during fiscal year 1991; rather, they should be used to offset unknown but potential cost increases due to fuel price inflation and other factors.

COAST GUARD

OPERATING EXPENSES

Amendment No. 13: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $2,339,839,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 14: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $2,039,839,000, of which $41,489,000 shall be derived from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement includes the following program changes to the House bill:

Mandated initiatives	−$369,000
FRAM recrewing	−2,719,000

Fisheries enforcement	+5,000,000
Coastal pollution	+1,500,000

HH-65A aircraft LTS-101 engine maintenance.—Contrary to initial presentations by the Coast Guard to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the conferees have determined that the Coast Guard will receive credits against its per hour engine costs resulting from the sale of engine parts to the Textron Lycoming Company. These credits, which are anticipated to total $7,700,000 through fiscal year 1991, will result in savings to the Coast Guard over and above the savings stemming from the power-by-the-hour agreement assumed in the Senate bill. Therefore, the conference agreement includes a $12,900,000 reduction.

Fast coastal interceptor boats.—The conferees concur with the House language directing that the $1,493,000 requested for the operation and maintenance of the Coast Guard's fast coastal interceptor boats (fast boats) be reallocated to other drug enforcement activities.

Oil spill liability trust fund.—The conferees direct the Coast Guard to submit quarterly reports to the House and Senate Committee on Appropriations detailing and summarizing all transfers to and expenditures from the oil spill liability trust fund. Each report shall account for each transfer to and expenditure from the fund as authorized by Section 9509 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended, and Sections 5003 and 5004 of the Oil Spill Act of 1990 (Public Law 101-380). The report shall also show amounts collectable under Section 9509(b) (2), (3), and (8) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. For those authorized expenditures subject to limitations, the report shall so indicate. The Coast Guard shall confer with the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations as to the format for these reports.

Hannibal bridge.—The conferees are concerned about reported delays in the construction schedule for the alteration of the Hannibal bridge. It has been reported that construction to eliminate this obstruction to navigation is approximately nine months behind schedule. The conferees urge the Coast Guard to expedite construction and to give the completion of this project a high priority.

Amendment No. 15: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate providing that not less than $197,000,000 shall be available for marine environmental protection activities.

ACQUISITION, CONSTRUCTION, AND IMPROVEMENTS

Amendment No. 16: Appropriates $406,331,000 instead of $391,994,000 as proposed by the House and $432,396,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 17: Provides $157,500,000 for vessel acquisition, construction, and improvements instead of $155,750,000 as proposed by the House and $168,385,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 18: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $90,010,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 19: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $15,000,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 20: Provides $106,885,000 for shore facility and aids to navigation facility acquisition, construction, and improvements instead of $81,385,000 as proposed by the House and $112,675,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 21: Provides $36,936,000 for acquisition, construction, and improvements administration costs instead of $32,659,000 as proposed by the House and $42,336,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 22: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows: : Provided further, That if necessary the Department of Transportation may transfer funds into the personnel, survey and design, and related costs subaccount from other subaccounts of the Acquisition, Construction and Improvements appropriation to cover personnel compensation and benefits for not to exceed five hundred eighty-six full time equivalent staff years during fiscal year 1991, provided that such transfer shall be subject to the established guidelines for prior approval reprogrammings as stated in House Report 101-315

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

378-Foot Cutter Modernization Programs.—The conferees agree that $2,000,000 of funds appropriated in fiscal years 1989 and 1990 for the 378-foot cutter weapon systems modernization project are to be reprogrammed into the 378-foot cutter fleet renovation and modernization (FRAM) project to cover cost overruns. The Senate had directed that $7,815,000 of such funds be reprogrammed; the House recommended no funding.

Post exchange/recreational facilities.—The conferees agree that no funds are provided to construct, modify, or upgrade Coast Guard post exchange or recreational facilities. As stated in the Senate report, such activities should be financed entirely by nonappropriated funds.

HH-65 Engine improvements.—The conferees direct the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, Department of Defense, to review the most up-to-date information regarding the capabilities of the Allison C30S and Arriel 1C2 engines. The Director shall evaluate the relative likelihood of the two engines to meet Coast Guard mission requirements in the HH-65 Dolphin airframe in the near term. The Director shall also investigate the capabilities and timeframe of availability of the T800 engine in evaluating the merits of proceeding with a proof-of-concept of a commercially available engine. The Director shall submit his findings within 90 days regarding the relative capabilities of the engines and the merits of proceeding with a commercial proof-of-concept through an independent and impartial report to the Commandant and the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations. Based on this report, the Commandant shall utilize $2,000,000 previously made available for HH-65 engine improvements to conduct a proof-of-concept on a commercial engine should the Director recommend that course of action.

OPBAT Medium-range helicopter.—The conferees agree that $8,200,000 of funds appropriated in fiscal year 1990 for HH-65 engine improvements are to be reprogrammed into the OPBAT Medium-range helicopter program. This amount, in combination with the $36,800,000 in new budget authority provided in fiscal year 1991, will result in total program funding at the level in the budget request. The Senate had directed that $10,200,000 of fiscal year 1990 funds be reprogrammed; the House recommended no such reprogramming.

ENVIRONMENTAL COMPLIANCE AND RESTORATION

Amendment No. 23: Appropriates $21,500,000 as proposed by the House instead of $22,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 24: Provides that $7,000,000 shall remain available until expended for environmental compliance and restoration activities as proposed by the Senate. The House bill contained no similar provision.

RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST, AND EVALUATION

Amendment No. 25: Appropriates $25,000,000 instead of $24,800,000 as proposed by the House and $25,741,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement distributes these funds as follows:

Search and rescue	$2,400,000
Aids to navigation	2,180,000
Marine safety	885,000
Marine environmental protection	3,720,000

The amount recommended will provide for 50 military and 86 civilian positions.

The conference agreement includes $150,000 to permit the Coast Guard to contract with the Centers for Disease Control to develop data on the number and severity of propeller injuries.

OFFSHORE OIL POLLUTION COMPENSATION FUND

Amendment No. 26: Deletes House provision that limits obligations to $60,000,000. The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

DEEPWATER PORT LIABILITY FUND

Amendment No. 27: Deletes House provision that limits obligations to $50,000,000. The Senate bill contained no similar provision.

FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION

OPERATIONS

Amendment No. 28: Appropriates $4,037,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $4,038,551,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conference agreement includes the following amounts:

Aeronautical charting.—The conference agreement includes an increase of $750,000 over the Senate bill for the aeronautical charting program.

Commuter slot rule.—Based upon assurances by the Secretary that the Department of Transportation will expeditiously process a petition for rulemaking filed with the Department on addressing the use of commuter slots, the conferees have concluded that no further direction on this issue is necessary at this time.

Reprogramming procedures.—The conferees agree with the Senate report language which outlines the reprogramming procedures that the FAA must follow. However, section 6 regarding assessments is deleted; and the dollar level of $500,000 cited under research, engineering, and development is changed to $3,000,000.

Amendment No. 29: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted, insert the following:

Provided further, That with appropriations made for the Airway Science Program, as authorized below in this section, the Federal Aviation Administration may hereafter enter into competitive grant agreements with institutions of higher education having airway science curricula, for the Federal share of the allowable direct costs of the following categories of items, to the extent that such items are in support of airway science curricula: (a) the construction, purchase, or lease with option to purchase, of buildings and associated facilities, and (b) instructional materials and equipment. Such funds are hereby authorized to be appropriated and may remain available until expended, as provided in such Acts. The Federal Aviation Administration shall establish guidelines for determining the direct costs allowable under grants to be made pursuant to this section. The maximum Federal share of the allowable cost of any project assisted by such grants shall be fifty percent

The managers on the part of the Senate will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement distributes these funds as follows:

Project	Fiscal year 1991 budget	Fiscal year 1991 House recommended	Fiscal year 1991 Senate recommended	Conference agreement
Total appropriation, F&E	2,500,000	2,138,615	2,240,018	2,095,407

Voice switching/control system.—The conferees understand that the Voice Switching/Control System (VSCS) is currently experiencing severe developmental problems. Consequently the program is undergoing an extensive review by the FAA which may lead to significant program restructuring. Because of the FAA's past history of awarding production contracts before developmental problems have been resolved, the conferees direct the FAA not to award the VSCS prime contract until thirty days following a report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations which describes the status of development, readiness for production, and a technical risk assessment of the VSCS program. This report should include an independent assessment of the program by the Executive Director of Acquisition, whose office was established in part to provide such analyses. The FAA is also directed not to reprogram any of the $75,000,000 provided for this program without receiving prior approval from the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

Precision runway monitors.—The conferees agree that none of the $30,550,000 provided for precision runway monitors is available for the procurement of production systems of either the electronic scan (E-scan) or Mode S back-to-back designs. Given the delay in production, the Senate recedes from its direction that priority consideration be given to certain airports. The additional $20,000,000 is provided to cover a cost overrun in the development contract for the E-scan system. The conferees agree that this important program should be kept on schedule, at the expense of the long-range international flight inspection aircraft, which can be deferred one year in order to finance a higher priority program. The conferees hope that in future years the FAA will be able to better control cost growth in order to preclude the necessity for such budgetary disruptions.

Terminal ATC facility replacement.—The conferees agree that the additional $4,000,000 provided for this program is available only for replacement of the air traffic control tower at the Luis Munoz Marin International Airport in San Juan, Puerto Rico. The Senate had provided $7,000,000 for this tower; the House provided no funds.

Instrument landing system establishment.—The conferees agree to provide $30,240,000 for this project. This includes $16,700,000 for sites listed in the President's budget proposal, $540,000 for partial ILS systems at Scappoose, Oregon; Bowerman Field, Washington; and Davenport, Iowa; and $13,000,000 for full ILS systems at the sites listed below: Goodwin Field, Arkansas; Sacramento, California; Lincoln, California; Spokane, Washington; Jonesboro, Arkansas; Gwinnett County, Georgia; DuPage County, Illinois; Huntsville, Alabama; Bowling Green, Kentucky; Mount Joy, Iowa; West Memphis, Arkansas; Owens Field, South Carolina; and Reading, Pennsylvania.

Instrument landing systems replacement.—The conferees agree to provide $26,935,000 for this project. This includes $25,000,000 for sites listed in the President's budget and $1,935,000 for systems in Sacramento, California; McCarran International Airport, Nevada; and Spokane International Airport, Washington.

Tower communications system.—The conferees agree that if operational problems occur in the existing system due to a lack of spare parts, the FAA is authorized to reprogram funding to resolve those problems.

Airway science curriculum.—The conferees direct that before distributing the $10,000,000 provided for the Airway Science Curriculum program, $300,000 be made available to the Mid-Atlantic Aviation Training and Education Center for computer stations and peripherals to run competency-based computer curricular materials. In addition, FAA shall study and report on broadening the recruiting base for future air traffic control professionals and the agency's plans to evaluate innovative educational methods and technological enhancements to air traffic control education.

Sixty-five mile-per-hour demonstration analysis.—The conferees agree with the position of the House that no funds should be used to continue the 65 mile per hour demonstration program, as authorized in 1987, due to a flawed sampling methodology. However, the conferees wish to clarify that such prohibition does not extend to NHTSA's overall analysis of the safety impact of the 65 mile per hour speed limit on rural interstates.

Section 410 grants.—The conferees have agreed to provide $5,000,000 for incentive grants to states under the section 410 NHTSA Drunk Driving Prevention Act program. The conference agreement also includes the provisions contained in section 336 of the Senate bill. By providing that a state could qualify for an incentive grant if it allocates "a significant portion of" fines and fees paid by those "apprehended and fined for" drunk driving to programs designed to stop drunk driving, the conferees have made clear that no all such fines and fees must be devoted to this sole purpose for a state to qualify. The conferees wish to emphasize that NHTSA should provide incentive grants to reward those states which are taking steps to provide for self-sufficient stop-DUI programs without requiring in the short term that such programs be totally self-sufficient.

Since grade crossing accidents by definition involve the interface between rail lines and roadways, it is imperative that resources and expertise in these respective areas of transportation be combined for an effective solution to the grade crossing problem.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE PROBLEMS CONFRONTING METROPOLITAN HOSPITALS

HON. LOUIS STOKES
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, recently, Cleveland Mayor Michael R. White was selected to address the Conference of Metropolitan Hospital Associations on the problems confronting hospitals serving urban areas. As mayor of a major American city, Mayor White has first-hand knowledge of the myriad issues encountered by health care providers today. His remarks touch upon many of the dilemmas facing hospital administrators—from providing health services to indigent patients, overcrowding, the violence associated with drugs and babies addicted to crack cocaine—all of which pose a serious threat to the continued viability of inner-city hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, Mayor White provides a candid and insightful analysis of this complex issue. I am taking this opportunity to bring his remarks to the attention of the Congress and those who are striving to find solutions to these problems. I hope that my colleagues will take a few moments to consider Mayor White's comments:

STATEMENT OF MAYOR MICHAEL R. WHITE, BEFORE THE METROPOLITAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION, SEPTEMBER 26, 1990

The word hospital comes from a Greek word meaning guest and a Latin word meaning host. In Greece, the word meant that not only did the host have an obligation to shelter the guest within his walls, but the guest had an obligation to offer reciprocal hospitality in the future. The resulting network of mutal obligations helped bind society together beyond the bounds of the individual extended family (Clairborne, 1989).

It was from within this framework of mutual obligation that hospitals evolved. From the time of the founding of the first formal hospitals in the middle ages, hospitals and communities accepted and acted on the mutual obligation which was changed somewhat from the duty of the guest to house a former host. Rather it was understood that hospitals would provide health care and the community would provide the financial and moral support necessary to maintain services.

I have come to speak to you today about where this mutual obligation stands today in America.

Hospital—the word means guest and host. Hospitals are the hosts for society's health concerns. But society, as guest, has a duty to hospitals as well. This duty is to make sure that hospitals stay in business. I am here today to tell you that both are in trouble. Hospitals, especially inner-city hospitals, are struggling for their lives. And inner-city residents, the people in cities like mine need services more than ever. I am here today to tell you about the problems we are having in my city and to solicit your ideas in resolving them.

Our hospitals first started to struggle after World War II when people began to move in droves to the suburbs. After World War II, financially secure Americans moved in great numbers from cities to suburbs taking with them the insurance policies which helped sustain the operations of urban hospitals. Furthermore, wanting to disassociate themselves from their outdated urban roots, they built new suburban hospitals and made the abandonment of the urban hospitals complete. Left in the inner cities were the medically indigent who, in addition to having no payment source, were often in poorer health because of social conditions such as proverty and poor environment. Left behind were poor people. Poor people who needed care because they were poor. Poor people who could not pay for care because they were poor. Poor people who hated being poor, but saw no way out of their poverty.

The programs of the great society of the 1960's and 1970's were supposed to lead the way out. Equality in health care was a major part of civil rights. In Cleveland, we saw programs like the free medical clinic spring up. These clinics saw anyone who walked in and never asked for payment. Using volunteer doctors, nurses and counselors, they built programs which lived out the promise of health care for all. The free clinic just celebrated its 20th anniversary last week—a triumph over the cuts of the Reagan era when health care became a business, not right.

Today the Cleveland free clinic sees a different type of patient. In the early days, many patients were young and from the suburbs. Their parents were well off and give big donations to the clinic which helped the clinic survive for many years. But today's patients are older and poorer. They come for treatment of high blood pressure and other chronic problems. They come from inner-city neighborhoods with no money to pay for their care. Still they are cared for with the same welcoming ways, but more recently, the clinic must now look for money from other sources. The facts are that in today's society, kindness and fairness cannot and do not keep health care providers open for business.

Our inner city hospitals find themselves in the same bind. Poor residents who have no other sources of health care are filling emergency rooms and outpatients clinics to overflowing capacity. They, too, are accepted although it is more and more difficult to find the financial resources to keep the doors open.

In athletic terms, runners have a saying about the most excruciating part of a race—when they still have a long way to go but feel like they are out of energy. They say they have hit the wall, ladies and gentlemen, I say we have hit that wall in health care. We have a very long way to go toward making health care a reality for everyone. The question is whether we have the will to destroy that wall.

What are the problems we are faced with in America's cities? They are not new. They are drug abuse, violence, high infant mortality rates, poor housing, poor nutrition, lack of jobs. What is new is that the bigger society has turned its back on these people, often blaming them for their problems. This cannot be tolerated. We must face the fact that these problems are everyone's problems. A society is only as healthy as its weakest member. As a mayor of a major American city, I am here to tell you now about what many, in society, are trying to ignore. And if everyone else who shares this podium with me today says the same thing, you will not hear it too many times. It is what America must face—we must not abandon the inner-city poor.

Let me describe Cleveland to you today. Forty-eight percent of Clevelanders live in high poverty neighborhoods; in 1970, only 21 percent of Clevelanders lived in high poverty areas; in 1980, the number was only 27 percent. The past 10 years have seen society as a whole become richer while inner city residents became poorer.

What does this mean for health care coverage? A 1988 survey by Case Western Reserve University showed that there were at least 100,000 persons in Cleveland below poverty and without health insurance. Nearly half of these were children under the age of 19. Thirteen thousand of these children had slept in shelters at least once, and 25,000 children had been served in hunger centers. Good health starts at the dinner table, in a warm, safe home. Our children are being denied this basic health care right. The lack of health insurance only adds insult to injury. When the effects of poerty take their toll on their health they must then face the problem of how to pay for their care.

A group of health care providers in Cleveland recently wrote a grant application for a unique health care program for one of our inner city neighborhoods. Their proposal is to use methods already being applied in Third World countries! Third World countries, is this an exaggeration? A sensationalist ploy? No, it is not. One need only look at Cleveland's infant mortality rate to know that we are more like many Third World countries than we are like our suburban neighbors. Cleveland has the highest infant mortality rate in Ohio. And, we have had the dubious honor of being in the top 10 nationally during the past decade. A child in Singapore has a better chance of survival than one in Cleveland. I am hoping the program will be funded. It will show that America is as concerned and respectful of its own citizens as it is of those in foreign countries.

What about the elderly? Let me tell you a story about a health care program for the elderly and let you draw your own conclusions. For the past several years, a Cleveland hospital has been developing a special outpatient program for the elderly. This is not a program where people are hooked up to machines and measured, probed and prodded. No. It is a program where elderly persons and their families can come to explain the problems mom or dad is having with walking, cooking, shopping or keeping warm. One doctor's visit might be 3 hours long and involve social workers, nurses and therapists as well as the doctor examining and questioning these basic functions. This program has been very successful in keeping older persons out of hospitals and nursing homes.

The hospital is having a hard time getting the money to keep the program going. Insurance does not pay for much of the cost of these person to person services and grant funding is running out. The reality of our lack of commitment to the elderly hit home when the physician in charge found out that the program would have to see 50 people in order to get reimbursed the same amount a surgeon would receive for a 2-hour operation. How can we keep our elderly healthy if we continue to deny them services for the two most basic aspects of health?

This story also tells us what we as a society want from our health care providers—high technology medicine. Insurance, if you have it will pay for surgery but not for meals on wheels. Insurance will cover a neonatal intensive care unit but will not pay for prenatal care for those working poor "too well off" to qualify for medicaid. We are more impressed by incubators and oxygen masks for 2½ pound babies than we are with food subsidies for pregnant women. The wall we have hit is the wall of science, the place we want to get to is the land of caring.

Let me tell you another story of how we have misplaced our priorities for health care. Cleveland has major problems with lead poisoning among children. Many homes built in the 1920's and 1930's are now in dire need of repair. One of the major repair needs is for scraping and replacing old flaking paint. This paint, often many layers thick, is full of lead. Children being curious often put these chips into their mouths; inner city children, often being hungry eat the chips.

Last year in Cleveland we found 888 children who had various levels of lead poisoning. But what are our programs designed to do—they are designed to wait until the level becomes so high that the child needs to be hospitalized. There is money to pay for hospitalization once the child is in danger of having convulsions and dying. Last year we hospitalized 133 children at an average cost of $3,000 per child and a total amount nearing $425,000. We submitted these children to 5 days of painful IV medicines which demonstrated the power of high tech medicine. Then we sent them back to their homes where the paint is still chipping and the dirt in the backyard is saturated by lead from car exhausts. Is there money for lead abatement? The answer is no. The estimates are that it would cost billions of dollars to remove lead hazards from inner city homes. So we put a high tech bandaid on the problem and tell ourselves we have tried.

Where are our hospitals in all of this? In a nutshell, they are overwhelmed. First, like the people they serve, they are suffering from our lack of a compassionate health policy. Last year in Cleveland, urban hospitals provided over $100 million in uncompensated care, a 14-percent increase from the year before. Our hospitals have acted as good hosts. The guests are too poor to pay and our hospital administrators are looking for answers to how to stay afloat.

Urban hospitals have several choices in their struggle. They can do either of the following: move to the suburbs where there are people with insurance, reorganize, either by cutting staff or merging with other hospitals, or they can close their doors and shift the burden to the remaining institutions. I am proud to say that no Cleveland hospital has moved to the suburbs and all have indicated a commitment to serve the poor. In fact, I believe that Cleveland is unique among American cities in that the burden of uncompensated care is spread proportionally among all urban hospitals. But the financial reality cannot be escaped, uncompensated care has already caused some hospitals to merge and others to close. Without a coherent national policy to address the issue of uncompensated care no one wants to predict the future.

One very sad note is that current Federal programs have put hospitals all over the United States in competition with one another. Efforts which would be better spent on providing services are now spent cornering the market, health care services are now, as a result of Federal policy, called product lines. Where are we heading? How can hospitals collectively get past the wall when they are being forced to building their own walls to protect their solvency?

Again, I am proud to say that Cleveland hospitals are making efforts to solve their problems as a group. A consortium of inner-city hospitals recently received a state grant for demonstration project for coverage for the working poor. The project is unique in several ways. It includes all inner city hospitals, it is managed by an HMO which is actively recruiting small businesses for participation. And finally, it seeks to define a fair, comprehensive and affordable benefit package for the working. In effect, this program will tell us how to insure universal health care benefits for all who need it. If successful, this proposal represents a local-state initiative. But local resources can only be stretched so far. Other solutions at the State and local level are still necessary. For instance, Ohio has yet to adopt a Federal goal of providing subsidized prenatal care for all women with 185 percent of the poverty level. In fact, in Cleveland we are even worse off. Only about 25 percent of those eligible for support at the current level of 130 percent of poverty have been signed up for this program called Healthy Start. I challenge my colleagues at the State and local levels to fully implement the current program and to move without delay to the higher eligibility levels. Cleveland has one of the best prenatal care systems in the country. We must take action to remove the financial barriers to accessing these programs.

I have not spoken much about drugs. We have recently seen an explosion of drug use, affecting men, women, children and especially the unborn. We have also seen an explosion in funding for drug programs. The city of Cleveland recently received an award to develop a program for pregnant women using cocaine. In the few short months the program has been in action, we have learned some bitter lessons. One is that lack of day care facilities is a major barrier to use of the services. Another is that the return to the neighborhood and home, especially on weekends and holidays, means a powerful temptation to begin using, and may erase a week's worth of therapy.

Unfortunately, funding for drug programs does include only small percentages for day care and virtually nothing for long-term residential care. Hospital care is not appropriate in most cases. What is necessary is homelike environments and alternatives to drug parties. As has recently been demonstrated in Washington, D.C., these and other neighborhood based programs are more effective than law enforcement alone. I ask State and Federal governmentals to fund more broad-based programs. Help us leap the wall with humane programs which address the factors leading to drug use: poverty, poor housing, poor nutrition, and lack of education.

National health insurance will insure a level of financial security for hospitals and other health care providers. But one must ask whether this alone will mean better health for Clevelanders. If there is one message, I can leave with you today, it is that society may be asking too much of its hospitals. We are looking for hospital-based solutions to problems which arise in the community and society at large. Hospitals have responded to society's demand for high technology services. But I know of no cat scan machine which can locate the source of frustration leading to drug use, no surgical technique to delay aging, no ultrasound machine which can make a baby "fat and sassy."

A national health policy will include more than reimbursement for hospital or doctor visits. It will recognize that good health begins in the home and the family, at the dinner table and in a clean backyard. A national health care policy will make nutritious food available to all, not have a WIC (womens, infants, and childrens program—food subsidies) program which provides food supplements once children become anemic. A national health care policy will include funds to reduce environmental lead, not give mothers the distressing news of elevated lead level. An enlightened health care policy will be based on the premise that hospital services should be available when everything else has failed not because nothing else is available.

Our hospitals have demonstrated their commitment to being good health care hosts in the community. As their guests, society must meet its obligations to support their endeavors. However, we must, realize that in many cases their role is to help crash the wall, not crash the wall for us. Like the Berlin Wall which was recently torn down, our wall of indifference will take a collective will and sense of social responsibility. Our hospitals must stand ready to participate in this effort.

THE BRONX SPECIAL OLYMPICS

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, throughout our Nation, the Special Olympics give millions of mentally retarded youths and adults the opportunity to participate in athletic training and sports competition. This week in my district, the Bronx Special Olympics is celebrating its 15th anniversary of service to the Bronx community. It is a decade-and-a-half of accomplishment that we are very proud of.

I have seen first-hand the hard work and dedication of the people runnning the programs at the Bronx Special Olympics. Their efforts truly touch all segments of our community. Through Special Olympic programs, the mentally retarded realize their physical potential and improve their self-esteem. Their parents are also taught a positive attitude, and the community learns more about the inspiring abilities of the handicapped.

By operating more than 50 training clubs and sites throughout our borough the Bronx Special Olympics helps prepare athletes for local, State, national, and international contests. The group has also been at the forefront of innovative programs, such as the Sponsor-an-Athlete Campaign, which provides funds for equipment, uniforms, and travel. Best of all, the people involved in the program volunteer their time and energy to help their neighbors.

I thank and congratulate all the people who have been involved in the Bronx Special Olympics over the past 15 years. Just as we are inspired by the special athletes who participate in their programs, we are equally inspired by their dedication and selflessness.

WORLD'S LARGEST RONALD McDONALD HOUSE

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the opening of a second Ronald McDonald House in my congressional district. The founding idea of the Ronald McDonald House, that children with cancer and their families need a supportive living environment, is clearly being furthered by the new House on East 73d Street in New York City.

Those who have dedicated their time and energy in an effort to make the existing Ronald McDonald House on 86th Street such an outstanding success are to be thanked for creating the opportunity to construct another. The newest extension of the Ronald McDonald project will offer love, support, and understanding to more families in need of a nurturing environment for themselves and their children and help prevent families in need from being turned away. I also commend all staff and volunteers who turned this opportunity into a reality. Upon its opening, the residence on 73d Street will be the world's largest Ronald McDonald House.

I should like to join my colleagues in conveying my warmest appreciation and highest praise to the staff and board of directors of the Ronald McDonald House project. Upon the completion of their newest House, they will have taken another step toward their goal of caring for the whole family when a member suffers from cancer.

A SALUTE TO PRATT INSTITUTE'S LIBRARY SCIENCE DEPARTMENT ON ITS 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, as the first professional librarian to become a Congressman in the U.S. House of Representatives, I have long recognized the critical role libraries play in educating and informing Americans, in taking a leadership role in the push for greater literacy in the United States, and in being a critical and important part of the complex, computerized, and ever-changing Age of Information.

New York City and New York State are friendly environments for libraries. New York librarians will undoubtedly be at the forefront of the national mission for libraries in the 1990's. And at the center of this New York leadership role serving as the philosophical anchor and intellectual rudder will be the Pratt Institute Graduate Library and Information Science Department, which this October is observing its 100th anniversary.

The Brooklyn, N.Y.-based program has come a long way since the 1800's when Pratt prepared librarians who, in addition to the tradition of studying, wore white gloves and were taught to pour tea. The need for library studies resulted from the growth of the Pratt Institute Free Library, the first free public library in Brooklyn, which opened in January 1888. Pratt Institute opened the School of Library Training in 1890 to train workers to guide the library's growth and manage the resources.

The school continues to thrive, even at a time when most major institutions are cutting back or abolishing library studies programs. The department, chaired by Rhoda Garoogian, offers a wide range of courses from library administration and reference services to technical process and technology. In addition to a curriculum that provides students with a basic knowledge of library and information science, the department provides the skills necessary for careers in major types of libraries and information centers. Students may elect to concentrate on law, business or health sciences librarianships as well as records management or media center management.

Mr. Speaker, I salute the Pratt Institute Graduate Library and Information Science Department, both for its 100th anniversary, and for being the oldest such library program in the country. As various political and social events reshape the 1990's landscape, and we enter a 21st century vastly different from the world of today, librarians, the expert generalists, will help us stay current with this world of mega-change. Information will play a major part in all of the decisions that are made by those who seek to guide and navigate this rapidly moving society. In this Age of Information the voice of the librarian will be heard. And the Pratt Institute Library Science Program will be a major leader of the chorus of librarians in New York and in our Nation.

MISGUIDED U.S. ROLE

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on official record a letter to the editor entitled, "Misguided U.S. Role" by Leona Kniess from the 9th District of Ohio which appeared in the Toledo Blade on October 3, 1990. In my district, and in the Nation, there is a growing skepticism among international experts and novices who ask, "Why are we really in Saudi Arabia?" The Congress and the administration need to consider these opinions before taking any further action in the Mideast.

Leona Kniess of Wauseon. OH writer:

I want to say again as an American citizen how much I disapprove of the U.S. involvement in the Middle East. It should be a matter for the United Nations. That's what the United Nations is for.

For this country to take the lead so completely, so overwhelmingly, is not only wrong, it is suspicious. Other nations are more dependent on oil than we are. England and France joined reluctantly, others not at all.

To say that we are saving the oil for the world is so false it is crazy. Do you suppose if Saddam Hussein had the oil in his control, he would not sell it? The price would probably be higher but it would not equal the cost, a billion a month, of keeping an army supplied, and the possibility of war. And we are trillions of dollars in debt.

Before this started, I read an article in Time which stated that Kuwait and Saudi Arabia control their oil all the way from their oil wells to the gasoline in our automobiles. Are U.S. business interests and American politicians working hand-in-glove with Kuwaitis and Saudi Arabian interests?

I don't for one minute believe Mr. Bush is acting out of sympathy for the Kuwaiti people. Not long ago the Chinese government massacred its own young people. A short time later Mr. Bush sent diplomats on a friendly visit to China. Until recently, the United States was backing a group in Cambodia that included the Khmer Rouge. They have been responsible for the death of thousands.

Mr. Bush said we have vital interests in the Middle East. What interests now that we do not have to fear Russia?

LABOR LEADERS CARE ABOUT CUBA

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the local and national union leaders for their actions in calling attention to the flight of Cuban political prisoners, two of whom are trade unionists imprisoned for over 25 years. I would like to enter an article which appeared in this month's issue of "AFL-CIO News" which describes their actions:

CUBANS IGNORE PLEAS FOR JAILED UNIONISTS

U.S. union leaders tried unsuccessfully to visit Cuban government officials in Washington to demand freedom for two Cuban trade unionists who have been in jail more than 25 years.

The AFL-CIO Labor Committee for a Free Cuba attempted to deliver to the Cuban Interests Section, housed in the Czechoslovakian embassy, letters written by U.S. unionists to Cuban leader Fidel Castro urging the release of the two prisoners. Mario Chanes and Ernesto Diaz.

To date, none of the U.S. trade unionists who have written to Castro has received a reply. Manuel Davis, First Secretary of the Interest Section, refused to meet with the AFL-CIO delegation and declined to send a staff member to receive the packet of letters.

"Keeping these men in prison in an outrage," stated John DeConcini, the AFL-CIO vice president who chairs the Cuba committee. "It appears the Cuban government wants to outdo even South Africa when it comes to keeping political prisoners in jail."

Mario Chanes de Armas was the leader of a brewery workers union in Puenta Grande. He was jailed in 1961 for opposing Castro's destruction of free trade unions. Ernesto Diaz, a transport worker and fisherman, suffered the same fate in 1964 for "crimes against the state."

"We will be gathering information about conditions of workers inside Cuba from a number of sources, including Cuban refugees, academic experts, journalists and trade unions in other countries," said DeConcini, who is president of the Bakery, Confectionery and Tobacco Workers.

"When the documentation is complete, we will ask the International Labor Organization and other appropriate bodies to take action," DeConcini said.

"Our purpose is to help workers in Cuba achieve the same rights as other workers around the world," he said. "We know it will be a long and difficult struggle, but we won't quit until Cuban workers achieve dignity and democracy."

In addition to DeConcini, the AFL-CIO Labor Committee for a Free Cuba includes: Leon Lynch, USWA vice president; Marty Urra, president, South Florida AFL-CIO; Jack Otero, TCU vice president; Ed Pulver, secretary-treasurer, New Jersey AFL-CIO; Murray Sisselman, president, United Teachers of Dade/AFT; Jose Collado, Carpenters representative; Olga Diaz, ACTWU manager; Rick Icaza, president, UFCW Local 770, and William C. Doherty, executive director, American Institute for Free Labor Development.

JUDGE ROBERT J. MALANG

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, on October 18, 1990, the Enrico Fermi Cultural Center will be honoring one of the Bronx's most outstanding civic leaders. On this date, Judge Robert J. Malang will be presented with the First Annual Fermi Award. This award is being given to him to acknowledge and thank him for his service to the community, both through his professional life and his personal endeavors.

Since the time of his graduation from Fordham Law School, Robert Malang has dedicated his life to the promotion of justice through various appointments. Among these include his service as the confidential assistant to the Board of Justices of the Bronx Supreme Court, deputy superintendent of insurance of the State of New York, and housing court judge of the Bronx Civil Court.

In receiving this award, Judge Malang is most notedly being recognized for his community service to the Belmont section of the Bronx. Judge Malang was dedicated to the enhancement of the Belmont area by providing better services and heightening the spirit and cultural vitality of the neighborhood. It was due to his efforts that the Belmont Community Center was founded in 1943 where he also served as president. Also, his expression of concern for the welfare of the family is seen through his effort to provide better services to the community as vice-chairman of Belmont Community Day Care Center.

Judge Malany strove to enhance the cultural pride and highlight the contributions Italian-Americans have given us through his chairmanship of the Enrico Fermi Cultural Center in the Belmont Public Library. His dedication to the community was even noted by the Italian Government in September 1982 when he was decorated for his fine work in the Italian-American community activities and conferred the title of Cavalier. Judge Malang sought to instill a family identity in the Belmont community and we thank him for his tireless efforts to make the Bronx a better place to live.

OPPOSITION TO AMENDMENTS CURTAILING OR CONDITIONING AID TO UNITA

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to all amendments that seek to cut aid to UNITA in H.R. 5422, the intelligence authorization bill for fiscal year 1991. The war in Angola needs to come to an end. The Angolan people deserve peace and the freedom to choose their own government. The MPLA regime took power illegally in 1975. No U.S. administration, either Democratic or Republican, has recognized the MPLA regime. Until 1985 the war waged on with no end in sight. Then this House voted to overturn the Clark amendment and begin assisting UNITA. From that point on the pressure began to build on the MPLA to negotiate a peace agreement and the pressure of strong U.S. support for UNITA has finally brought the MPLA to direct, face to face negotiations with UNITA. Make no mistake about it, were it not for United States assistance to UNITA there would not be a chance for peace today in Angola.

Our current policy has been supported by the House Intelligence Committee. It has been endorsed time and again by a majority of the U.S. Senate. On October 8, it was even endorsed by the Washington Post which stated: "To pull the plug on a southern Africa policy that has succeeded in other aspects and now seems near succeeding in Angola is perverse."

The goal of our policy is to force the MPLA to agree to free and fair, internationally supervised, multiparty elections in Angola. This is what our foreign policy has helped accomplish in neighboring Namibia as well as Nicaragua and Eastern Europe. But the MPLA has shown by its deeds, including the largest military offensive of the entire war earlier this year at Mavinga, that it must be pressured into agreement on a ceasefire and elections.

UNITA has stated publicly that once the ceasefire and elections have been finalized between it and the MPLA, it will no longer have a need for military assistance. That is the appropriate way for this body to bring this war to the end. We are in the end game in this bloody conflict. To send a signal backing off of our successful policy would prolong the war and be shameful.

I, therefore, urge the defeat of all amendments to the Intelligence authorization bill that would cut United States aid to the brave Angolan resistance fighters of UNITA.

Mr. Speaker, the Heritage Foundation's policy expert on Africa and Third World Affairs, Mike Johns, provides an excellent analysis for continued support of UNITA and I insert it in the RECORD:

[From the Heritage Foundation, July 31, 1990]

WITH FREEDOM NEAR IN ANGOLA, THIS IS NO TIME TO CURTAIL UNITA ASSISTANCE

(By Michael Johns)

In Angola, where a civil war has raged for 15 years between the country's Soviet-backed Marxist regime and an American-supported resistance movement, peace and freedom are now within sight. Unable to achieve a military victory, the Angolan regime of Jose Eduardo dos Santos is at last considering resistance demands for multi-party elections. These elections would allow a cease fire in the Angolan civil war. An obstacle to this has appeared not in Angola, but in the U.S. Congress. There Senator Edward Kennedy, the Massachusetts Democrat, intends this week to attach an amendment to the defense authorization bill that would end American military assistance to Angola's democratic resistance forces, known as the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). Kennedy thus would remove all incentive for Angola's Marxist regime to continue negotiations, and would likely encourage that regime again to seek a military—rather than diplomatic—solution to Angola's civil war.

The Angolan conflict is now at a critical crossroads. Though Moscow continues to support Angola's Marxist leaders, it is possible that Mikhail Gorbachev's stated intention of ending East-West tensions will prompt him to end the Soviet Union's $800 million annual military subsidy of Angola. It is possible that Gorbachev eventually would support a democratic settlement in Angola.

Last December, Moscow helped the Angolan regime launch the largest military offensive against UNITA in the civil war's 15-year history. The offensive was backed by an estimated $1.5 billion in sophisticated Soviet weaponry, including Hind-25 helicopter gunships, MiG-23 Flogger and SU-25 Frogfoot aircraft, and T-55 tanks. Some 1,000 Soviet military advisors directed the fighting from the Angolan front. Some military analysts consider the Soviet-backed offensive in Angola among the largest conventional military battles since World War II, matching even the bloodiest conflicts of Korea and Vietnam. The offensive was an indication that Moscow had not yet abandoned the use of military force in pursuit of its global objectives, and that it remains hostile to pro-Western, democratic movements in the Third World.

FORCING NEGOTIATIONS

With American-supplied weapons and other materiel, the Marxist offensive was turned back. UNITA drove Soviet military advisors and the Angolan army from the key town of Mavinga in May. Now, with dos Santos on the defensive, UNITA is calling for a cease fire and direct negotiations leading to multi-party elections. The Angolan regime agreed to meet UNITA June 18th in Lisbon, and since then the Portuguese government has been involved in negotiations with both dos Santos and UNITA. As a result of UNITA military pressure, the Angolan Marxists announced on July 3 that they would consider working toward a multi-party democracy, though for now the government remains a repressive one-party state.

AMERICA'S INVESTMENT

Since it began arming UNITA in 1986, Washington has made a substantial investment in UNITA's bid for a democratic Angola. American support for UNITA has discouraged Soviet and Cuban military involvement in southern Africa. Indeed, having been defeated in battle, some 65,000 Cuban troops in Angola are now headed back to Havana as a result of a negotiated settlement reached in December 1988.

American support for UNITA since 1986 has also helped advance the cause of democracy in Angola, raising hope that the 15-year conflict can be settled without further loss of blood. Angola's Marxist regime took power in 1975 promising free and fair multi-party elections; it has yet to hold them. Since 1975, UNITA leader Jonas Savimbi has been demanding that the Angolan regime keep its promise. George Bush has supported Savimbi's objective, promising last January that UNITA will receive American support "until genuine national reconciliation has been achieved."

Together with America's commitment to defending Western Europe and supporting those Afghans who fought the Soviet invasion, Washington's support for UNITA has enjoyed bipartisan support. Leaders of the Angolan congressional task forces include Senator Dennis DeConcini of Arizona and Representative Dave McCurdy of Oklahoma, both Democrats, and Senator Robert Kasten of Wisconsin and Representative Joel Hefley of Colorado, both Republicans. They have led this bipartisan charge for freedom in Angola. Without continued bipartisan support for UNITA, the war certainly will continue, and the cause of multi-party elections will be lost.

EFFECTIVE INCENTIVE

Kennedy and other critics of American aid to UNITA contend that ending assistance to UNITA will prompt the Angolan regime and Moscow to seek a settlement to the conflict. However, this contention ignores what has been happening in Angola. After all, the civil war there raged for eleven years before Washington began assisting UNITA in 1986; during this time Washington advocated an end to the fighting. The Angolan regime ignored Washington and instead called in some 40,000 Cuban troops and billions of dollars of Soviet military aid in an effort to defeat UNITA with armed force. It was only after Washington began supporting UNITA that the dos Santos regime agreed to send the Cuban troops home and to begin negotiations.

Now is not the time for Washington to renege on its commitment to UNITA. American assistance to UNITA continues to be the only hope for peace and freedom in Angola. To terminate that assistance now would remove the only effective incentive Angola's Marxist regime has to negotiate a settlement. It would open the door for further militarism on behalf of the Angolan regime, and close the door on the democratic aspirations of the Angolan people.

AMERICANS CAN COMPETE

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, over the past few weeks the media has inundated Americans with tales of economic doom and environmental despair. If you believe everything you read, you might think that our Nation is headed for a fall. Paul Harvey, however, reports the contrary. His October 6 broadcast tells the story of a Utah County steel mill which, in 2 years, has resuscitated the region's ailing economy and protected its fragile environment. Remarkably enough, both were accomplished without Government assistance and independent of Federal regulations. I urge my colleagues to read Mr. Harvey's piece. It not only pays tribute to the American spirit, but more importantly it reminds us that Uncle Sam need not become industry's babysitter.

AMERICANS CAN COMPETE!

Americans can't compete? Don't you believe it.

In 1987 USX Corporation closed its Geneva Steel Plant in Utah County, between Provo and Salt Lake City.

It was a tragic blow to employees and to related businesses in the area but USX was convinced that the Geneva operation, bedevilled by high labor costs, foreign competition and domestic environmentalists, could never be profitable.

The Cannon family of Utah believed otherwise, bought the mill for 40 million dollars.

That was just two years ago.

This past year Geneva Steel produced 500 million dollars worth of steel, is now the tenth largest steel company in the United States.

The dramatic turnaround in 24 months is an example worthy of emulation.

Joe Cannon, as President of Geneva, rather than fussing with environmentalists and unions leaders, instituted a "Golden Rule" approach to these relationships.

Geneva instituted profit sharing.

On site management replaced absentee overseers.

Then voluntarily Geneva set about to clean up the environment of Utah County.

While most industries in the United States were spending their money on lawyers to fight air quality requirements, Geneva Steel set about voluntarily to exceed those requirements.

Today, prospering, Geneva can afford to invest another $70 million dollars in a further thirty month cleanup.

Without waiting for either the federal government or the state to mandate air quality, this corporation is replacing open hearth furnaces with enclosed high-purity oxygen furnaces, adding a gas-desulferization system, completing a biological wastewater treatment plant.

The all new state-of-the-art computer-controlled equipment will be operating by mid 1992.

The changes will reduce primary and secondary particulate emissions by at least 55 percent. Ninety percent of the particulate emissions—the ones most likely to be a health hazard—are already being removed. The extended cleanup will raise that "purification" process to 96 percent.

The Environmental Protection Agency is applauding the Geneva initative.

Geneva Steel now furnishes employment to 2,600 workers, and is at the margin of Fortune's Top 500 corporations in our nation, is exporting steel to Argentina, Belgium and Japan. (An American firm exporting steel to Japan!) Up to 15 percent of Geneva's production has been sold to Japan.

In its first two years since the Cannons took over, Geneva Steel has earned $120 million dollars after taxes, much of which is being used to modernize the plant.

Geneva Steel is "blooming where it's planted," a good neighbor and prospering in the process.

Americans can't compete? Don't you believe it!

HONORING THE BUTLER COUNTY VETERAN OF THE YEAR

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today before the U.S. House of Representatives to honor Peter J. "Miles" Standish of Mars, PA., the Butler County Veteran of the Year.

Enlisting in the U.S. Marine Corps in December of 1942 after being graduated from Pittsburgh's Oliver High School and after working briefly for the Pennsylvania Railroad, Mr. Standish served our country until February of 1945 and returned to the railroad with knowledge of engineering drawing from the University of Pittsburgh night school. "Miles" retired from the railroad in 1983.

Joining V.F.W. Post 249 in Butler about 30 years ago, Mr. Standish moved to Adams Township several years later and joined American Legion Post 787 in Mars, where he became very active, holding several post positions, including post commander.

"Miles," who later served as Butler County American Legion Commander from 1968 to 1969, also has been 26th District commander from 1971 through 1973; 26th District adjutant; 26th District deputy commander—from 20 years; Western vice commander for 1978 through 1979; and candidate for Legion State commander for 1981–82.

Mr. Standish, who has been married to his wife Barbara for 29 years, has three sons: Gary, Peter, Jr. and Steven, (C.P.O) U.S. Navy; four brothers who served in the military: John (U.S. Army), Stanley (U.S. Air Force), Anthony (U.S. Army) and George (U.S. Navy); and two sisters: Mary and Ann.

In addition Mr. Speaker, Peter J. Standish Sr. has been very active in community affairs, including the Boy Scouts of America's Pioneer Trail Council and service as Eagle Scout advancement chairman. He is also: a life member of the D.A.V. Butler Chapter 64 where he is currently first vice commander; a member of the 40 & 8 Voiture 5; life member of the Marine Corps League; volunteer of the V.A.V.S. of the Medical Center in Butler with over 300 hours of volunteer service; and I.R.S. Vita Program Volunteer—helping the poor and elderly.

Mr. Standish transferred his V.F.W. membership from Butler to Mars Post 7505 and served as judge advocate, and as chairman of the Voice of Democracy program. He has also served on the Butler Area War Veterans Day Committee since its inception.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today before Congress to honor Peter Standish as Butler County Veteran of the Year. Mr. Standish is a man of whom we are very proud in Butler County and the 4th Congressional District of Pennsylvania. He exemplifies the ideal of volunteer service and, like a number of other area veterans, gives generously of time, money and effort to support Veterans activities throughout my congressional district. Men such as Peter Standish continue to make the United States of America the greatest Nation on Earth with the bravest and most dedicated war veterans.

TRIBUTE TO SAMUEL S. STRATTON

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Samuel S. Stratton, a dear friend and former colleague from New York State who passed away on September 14, 1990, after a massive heart attack.

I should also like to thank colleague, Mike McNulty of Green Island, NY, Sam's successor, who has sponsored this special order in Sam's honor.

As dean of the New York delegation, and a member of the Armed Services Committee, Sam Stratton was a demonstrative force in this body. Throughout his 15 terms in the House, Sam gained respect and admiration from all with whom he came into contact, especially those Members, like myself, who were privileged enough to work closely with him.

At this time I should like to join my colleagues in commemorating the memory of Samuel S. Stratton. I should also like to offer my best to Sam's wife, Joan, and their five children. I shall always treasure the opportunity I had to work with such a fine statesman. Sam will surely be missed by all.

CANCER RESEARCH GAINS FOOTHOLD HERE

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, cancer patients from rural areas have traditionally needed to endure lengthy travels and temporary relocations while receiving treatments for their illness. However, with the assistance of dedicated men and women in my district and a recent federal grant, the Peoria-based Illinois Oncology Research Association offers experimental cancer therapy and treatments for cancer patients throughout central Illinois. The success of this program illustrates the potential rural-based programs such as these have in assisting our national health research centers, and more importantly, in treating cancer patients with experimental treatments who might otherwise not have had that opportunity. I am proud of having assisted in the procurement of the Federal grant and of members of the medical community in my district for their fine work.

At this point I wish to insert in the RECORD the article, "Cancer Research Gains Foothold Here," which appeared in the Peoria Journal Star, Sunday, October 14, 1990.

[From the Peoria Journal Star, Oct. 14, 1990]

CANCER RESEARCH GAINS FOOTHOLD HERE—PEORIA PROGRAM PUTS NEWEST CURES WITHIN PATIENT'S REACH

(By Dean Olsen)

Prescott Johnson watched as a nurse used a syringe and needle to squirt medicine into his bloodstream.

"It's no big deal," the 69-year-old Monmouth resident said of the injection, which took only a few seconds. "I just hope that if there's any cancer in my system, the medicine knocks it out. I'll probably live to be 100. What do you think?"

Johnson's confidence stems from state-of-the-art treatments he is receiving to prevent a recurrence of his colon cancer. To get the experimental treatment, he doesn't have to travel hundreds of miles to the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., or other major medical facilities.

He doesn't even need to travel the 60 miles east to Peoria. Instead, he drives 14 miles once a week to Galesburg Cottage Hospital, where he participates in a clinical trial through a Peoria-based research program supported by the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md.

"It's much more convenient, much simpler," Johnson said of his trips to Galesburg. The retired Monmouth College philosophy professor said the treatment seems to be working.

In the past decade, experimental cancer therapy has expanded from large institutions in cities such as Chicago, New York, Los Angeles and Rochester so that more patients can benefit and researchers can study more patients, said Dr. Charles Moertel of the Mayo Clinic.

The trend means fewer Peoria-area residents have to shoulder the cost and emotional trauma of traveling long distances and temporarily living elsewhere to get treatment.

More than 2,000 cancer patients here have participated in local experimental therapies, with varying degrees of success, since Peoria's program began in 1979.

About 250 people participate each year in about 65 kinds of treatment at a time. Those treatments are coordinated with other research sites around the country.

Peoria doctors administer the treatments in hospitals throughout the area, including those in Peoria, Princeton, Canton, Galesburg, Bloomington, Macomb and Carthage.

Their patients have received treatment as good, if not better, than treatment available in large research institutions, said Dr. James B. Gerstner of Peoria, an oncologist who helps coordinate the area's research.

"People often think of places far distant as having the answers to the things going on," the 44-year-old Tremont native said. "You're never an expert in your own town."

Peoria's program has a good reputation around the country. The program's quality was affirmed in August when the Peoria-based Illinois Oncology Research Association and its Community Clinical Oncology Program received a $732,000 federal grant to continue the experimental treatment program.

"Be assured, the treatment is the best in the world," Moertel said of Peoria's program. He directs the North Central Cancer Treatment Group, which helps coordinate treatment in Peoria and at other locations in the United States and Canada.

Moertel said experimental therapy programs, called clinical trials, can be conducted with greater precision in smaller communities such as Peoria than at large institutions. That is because seasoned doctors carry out community-based programs, while less-experienced doctors often carry out clinical trials in the large institutions, he said.

Gerstner and his Peoria colleagues helped conduct trials that led to a breakthrough in preventing recurrence of colon cancer after surgery. Their results were combined with results of similar trials elsewhere in the country and were published in the Feb. 8, 1990, issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Johnson, the Monmouth resident, is receiving treatment similar to the type reported in the article.

Gerstner said participation in clinical trials is strictly voluntary and carries risks, although he said he doesn't know of any local patients who have died because of adverse reactions to the experimental drug therapies.

He said there is no way to estimate the cure rate or even the rate at which local patients are improving because every case is different.

In the testing stage, some of the patients receive free drugs not yet approved by the Food and Drug Administration; others may get FDA-approved drugs but in combinations that haven't been fully tested. Patients pay for everything in their treatment except experimental drugs.

For many patients, experimental treatment is their best or last hope.

"Treatment makes me more tired but I'm fine," Prescott said.

He said he felt a duty to participate in experimental treatment, to help increase the body of knowledge on cancer. He said he doesn't fear the risks.

"It's the thing to do to make sure you cover all the bases you can," he said. "In the old days, all they did was the surgery and left the rest up to chance.

Discovering she had Hodgkin's disease came as a complete surprise to East Peorian Angela Ashburn in 1986. She was 20 at the time.

"My first reaction when I looked at my parents was, 'OK, what's next?' I wasn't crying," she said. "I just didn't look at it as a death sentence. I looked at it as an obstacle."

Her doctor recommended an experimental treatment and she didn't hesitate. "I didn't care if it was experimental or not," she said. "I just wanted what he thought was the right treatment."

After eight months of nausea and fatigue, the treatment was over for Ashburn, who is single and manages a pizza restaurant. Her cancer is now in remission.

"I was confident it was going to work," she said. "I like to be a positive person."

GLENN YOAKUM REMEMBERED

HON. DON SUNDQUIST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, Glenn Yoakum certainly meant a lot to east Tennessee and one of the pastors at his funeral services rightly compared his death to the tremor of the Earth and the gap left in the forest when a mighty oak tree falls.

As the speaker eloquently and truthfully stated, he touched so many lives in so many ways it is hard to imagine Claiborne County without him—and as a result, east Tennessee will never be the same again.

Glenn made his mark in the business world as a young man whose first job paid $100 a month in the depths of the Great Depression. His success here needs no recounting—how Claiborne County Bank grew and helped fund the growth of the county, as well as his solid but less spectacular successes in oil, tobacco, farming, and other interests.

Glenn provided well for his family, whom he loved deeply, and was able to do a great deal to help others on the way to prosperity in the process. But yet he found time and energy for a remarkable varied public life that gave him immense satisfaction.

He served in the Navy in World War II. He completed two terms as a State senator. Off and on, through the years, he served nearly 30 years on the Claiborne County Board of Education, and was chairman at the time of his death. He had been a trustee of east Tennessee State University and a member of the First State Board of Education created in Tennessee.

Glenn served as county judge and in a number of civic posts that were less known, far less glamorous and very time consuming on an already crowded schedule, but he was not known to refuse a call for public service. He was truly exemplary of the axiom that "to get something done, you'd better find a man that is already busy."

But these things—a remarkably successful business career, a record of community service anyone could envy—do not give us the feel of what it was to be around the man and catch something of the sheer zest and excitement of every minute of being alive that he enjoyed.

"Whatsoever ye do, do it with a will." This was Glenn's commitment to life and one that he kept. He firmly believed in, and practiced, the notion that you would get out of life proportional to what you put into it. He didn't believe in doing things halfway. At a time when most men lay down their responsibilities, he went back to school to finish earning the college degree started in 1930's. This outlook kept him in remarkably good health throughout his active life. He liked action. I doubt if he ever spent over 5 minutes in morbid introspection.

One part of his career was an early period as teacher, janitor, coach, maintenance man, counselor, and principal of a school of the type now vanished but well known to older folks. I really think this experience was central to Glenn's ability to deal with people. One writer, speaking of a well known British statement said, "He had little use for theory, but for the more practical part, preferring to read men, rather than books." The statement could have been made about Glenn.

This extremely able businessman often said, when asked the secret of his success, that he didn't claim any great expertise in the mechanics of business, but thought he was "a pretty good judge of character."

Besides the insight into people, Glenn had a quality any good teacher must have: delight in seeing those under him succeed. This part of his teaching background carried over into his banking philosophy and when young, struggling couples made a determined effort to shoulder responsibilities and get ahead, Glenn responded with that generous recognition of merit you see in the truly strong who take pleasure in the growing strength of others. This was an endearing quality, and one that will be remembered.

It is a good thing to have lived like that. The real legacy this man leaves is not material wealth, nor the many positions held, impressive though that record is, but his impact on people's lives. The music teacher and band director at the Tazewell High School spoke of Glenn, not as an employer, but one genuinely concerned with supporting the children's programs, contributing symphony concert tickets when the bank budget would not stretch that far, and attending functions where they performed. Such instances are legion.

In politics, personal spite and bitterness play a larger part than it should. Glenn was human, like all of us but he had a way of not holding a grudge and being able to rise above petty concerns that could teach us all some good lessons.

Glenn served as county Republican chairman, as had his father before him. In that capacity, as in others, his loyalty to his friends was outstanding. Shortly before quitting his post, he remarked that one ambition he had was to be a delegate to a national convention. Happily, he was—for George Bush.

Glenn's son-in-law, Robert Barger, who had worked side by side with him for the past 20 years stated about Glenn upon his death, "few lives have touched so many with such great impact. He was part of the past, a creator of the present and a planner for the future."

Glenn is survived by his wife, Mrs. Leo Walker Yoakum; his daughters, Eleanor Yoakum Barger, Glenna Yoakum Adams, and Martha Yoakum Gilreath; his grandchildren, Stephanie Barger, Rob Barger, Oliver Adams and Eleanor Johnson; and his sister, Annette Gentry.

When the books were finally closed, and the last audit completed, every obligation as a father and citizen is paid in full, leaving a generous surplus under good will.

We have only one shot at life. We have one chance to leave someone we love with a smile. We have one chance to earn the respect even of our adversaries. And we have one chance to fill every breathing moment we can in the best way we can. Glenn managed to do this, proving that goals such as these are reachable. This should be inspiration for us all.

STUDIES DEMONSTRATE INSTRUCTIONAL EFFECTIVENESS OF CIVICS PROGRAM TEACHING STUDENTS ABOUT THE CONSTITUTION

HON. ROBERT S. WALKER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, a series of studies, conducted by the Educational Testing Service [ETS], one in 1988 and two more recent ones this year found that students who studied the We the People * * * curriculum significantly outperformed students who used other approaches to studying the Constitution. The National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and the Bill of Rights is part of the We the People * * * portfolio of excellent programs which educate young people about the principles of American Government.

The National Bicentennial Competition is now beginning its fourth year [of a 5 year program]. Funded by an act of Congress and cosponsored by the Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution, the program is administered nationwide through the 435 congressional districts, the four trust territories, and the District of Columbia. This educational program is developed and administered by the Center for Civic Education, which has a 25-year track record of developing curricular materials for our Nation's schools, conducting teacher training seminars and administering national projects such as the National Bicentennial Competition.

The first study released in May 1988 by the Educational Testing Service evaluated the instructional effects at the high school level of the National Bicentennial Competition on the Constitution and Bill of Rights. The results were highly positive and encouraging, and should serve as an important statement on the effectiveness of this excellent civic educational project. Quoting directly from the report, the most significant findings were:

Participating students scored significantly higher on a test of the history and principles of the U.S. Constitution than similar students in comparison classes. Significant differences were found at both the 11th grade and the 12th grade levels, and they extended to all six major curriculum units covered by the test.

All of the participating teachers indicated the use of the We the People * * * curricular materials stimulated student interest in the Constitution and Bill of Rights.

The overwhelming majority of participating teachers were satisifed with student performance in classroom discussions, debates and written work prompted by their use of the curricular materials.

Over 80 percent of the participating teachers indicated that they would use the We the People * * * curricular materials again next year, and teachers were unanimous in recommending these materials to their colleagues.

Participating teachers felt that We the People * * * was among the best curricular materials they had seen in the field of civic education.

Over 90 percent of the participating teachers believed that the content contained in We the People * * * was very important to the field of civics and to education in general.

Most recently, the Educational Testing Service conducted two more studies on classes which studied the We the People * * * curriculum, at both the upper elementary and middle school levels. The results of these two studies confirmed and reinforced the positive results of the 1988 ETS survey finding that students who used the We the People * * * curriculum developed by the Center for Civil Education significantly outperformed students who used other approaches to studying the Constitution. For example, at the upper elementary level, 94 percent of students who used the We the People * * * materials knew that the reason the framers of the Constitutioni separated the powers of government was so that no branch would become too powerful. Only 56 percent of comparison students knew this basic constitutional principle.

Mr. Speaker, I have had first-hand experience in schools in my district with the We the People * * * programs and the National Bicentennial Competition. I am proud to report that my congressional district has 44 participating schools in the We the People * * * programs. This total includes 14 high schools, 13 middle schools, and 17 upper elementary schools. I have been pleased to be an active participant with these fine programs by attending the simulated congressional hearings, presenting awards to students, speaking at in-service teacher training seminars, and teaching constitutional lessons in several classrooms.

Mr. Speaker, I greatly support this civic-minded project. Our Nation needs bright new minds and effective citizens to lead us into the next century. Programs such as We the People * * * are helping to mold a new generation of leaders by sharpening young people's perceptions of the world of government and politics.

TRIBUTE TO DR. CHARLES PRUDHOMME

HON. MIKE ESPY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. ESPY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of Dr. Charles Prudhomme, one of our country's pioneering black physicians who entered psychiatry. Dr. Prudhomme, who lived from 1908 until 1988, is a symbol of perseverance. When strict segregationist rules and practices were the reality of the day, Dr. Prudhomme made succeeding a reality in his personal life. Dr. Prudhomme, a native of Opelousas, LA, is an ideal role model for all medical students today.

I recently received a letter from the American Psychiatric Association expressing its pride that Dr. Prudhomme once served as a vice president for the organization. So that more Americans can learn about Dr. Prudhomme, I would like to enter into the RECORD the following article on Dr. Prudhomme, which was published in the October edition of Psychiatric News:

CHARLES PRUDHOMME OVERCAME MUCH TO BE A PSYCHIATRIST

(By Lucy Ozarin, M.D.)

The APA Archives contains two pieces of autobiographical material on Dr. Charles Prudhomme (1908-88), one of the first black physicians to enter psychiatry and probably the second black psychoanalyst in the U.S. He was also a vice president of APA in 1970-71, the first black to hold elected office in the Association.

One of the items is a taped talk he gave in May 1972 at the Washington Psychoanalytic Society, and the other is an oral history taped in 1975 by Jean Jones, then APA librarian. Both are fragmented, and names mentioned by Dr. Prudhomme are misspelt in the transcript (and hence unidentifiable), but the difficulties and rebuffs suffered by Dr. Prudhomme because of his color come through loud and clear.

Dr. Prudhomme was born in Opelousas, LA. His maternal grandfather was Puerto Rican and his grandmother black. His grandfather had opened a country store that his father later took over. When Charles was 3 years old, his father developed tuberculosis and the family began a migration ostensibly destined for Denver.

One of the stops along the way was Kansas City, Mo., where Charles and his mother remained while his father moved on. Charles became a fine baseball player and graduated from high school second in his class.

Charles entered the University of Kansas in 1925 but remained only a short time. Because of segregation practices, he was not allowed to take certain courses, and he could not use the college swimming pool. He obtained a scholarship to Howard University with the aid of an interested alumnus and for the next six years alternated between college and work. After graduating in 1931, he entered Howard University Medical School. He was able to complete his studies there in 1935 with scholarship money from the State of Missouri—Missouri did not allow blacks at the state university but did pay out-of-state tuition. Dr. Prudhomme recounts that he asked for help from his senator at the time, Harry S Truman, and received it. He served an internship at Freedman's Hospital in 1936-37.

During his years at Howard, he had numerous contacts at St. Elizabeths Hospital, forging strong ties to several physicians there. One is identified as Dr. Kaufman. This is probably Dr. Ben Karpman, an analyst and prolific writer on forensic psychiatry and head of psychiatry at Howard from 1921 to 1941. He required seniors to write a paper on a psychiatric subject, and Dr. Prudhomme wrote on suicide in the American Negro, a paper later published in the Psychoanalytic Review (1938).

Dr. Prudhomme had hoped to intern and take residency at St. Elizabeths Hospital, but he was told that the legislation that had established the hospital in 1855 enforced segregation (the law remained in force until 1954). He talks of a Dr. Craven at St. Elizabeths who was interested in the dreams of black people. Under the guise of providing analysis. Dr. Craven obtained those dreams. Dr. Prudhomme says that he produced prepared dreams for Dr. Craven.

In 1937 Dr. Prudhomme obtained a fellowship at the University of Chicago, but he was dismayed to learn that he was slated to work at Providence Hospital for black people. He had contacts with analysts like Franz Alexander and determined that he, too, would be an analyst. He returned to Washington to try again to get into St. Elizabeths, "using my Senator, Harry S Truman, for all he was worth."

Truman arranged for him to go to Tuskegee in 1940, where Dr. Prudhomme met a number of black psychiatrists who had been trained in Boston by Dr. Solomon Carter Fuller, the first black psychiatrist in the U.S. Dr. Prudhomme remained at Tuskegee until the Army transferred him in 1943 to Howard University to head the Army Specialized Training Program. That year he registered at the Washington School of Psychiatry, where one of his teachers was Frieda Fromm-Reichman. She took him on for analysis, and later he received supervision from Edith Weigert.

It was not an easy road to be admitted to the Washington Psychoanalytic Society. He thought he had completed the requirements when he was told that since his supervised cases were women, he needed to work with a male patient. He was finally admitted in 1958.

Dr. Prudhomme practiced psychoanalysis in Washington for a number of years and continued his teaching at Howard. He recounts numerous incidents related to racism. He tells of having a confirmed reservation in a hotel in Cincinnati for an APA meeting in the early 1950's but was sent instead to the hotel for blacks. He dwells on his rejection for a position at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

One wishes that the material on Dr. Prudhomme in APA's Archives was less fragmented and relayed more of his philosophy and thoughts on being a black pioneer in psychiatry and psychoanalysis. He was truly a trailblazer for the education of black psychiatrists and often pointed out the importance of cultural patterns in the practice of psychiatry. The material strongly conveys, however, a sense of the many difficulties he encountered because of racism and the aggressiveness he needed to achieve his goals.

Dr. Jeanne Spurlock, deputy medical director for minority and national affairs at APA, supplied several additional notes. She said that Dr. Prudhomme had told her of his disappointment in not being allowed to play with white baseball teams in his youth. And when he was in Chicago, he had a bitter disagreement with a prominent neuropathologist who insisted that blacks do not contract multiple sclerosis after Dr. Prudhomme had correctly diagnosed the illness.

ELDERLY STRAINING EMERGENCY DEPARTMENTS

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, these are not members of the knife and gun club traffic on a busy Saturday night in our Nation's emergency rooms. The day of the week and the hour of the day or night have little impact on the steady stream of visitors who now make up 40 percent of patients seen in the emergency departments. These are the elderly, age 65 and older. These are the members of our society who have Medicare—the ones for whom we assured access to health care 25 years ago.

Some of these persons are true emergencies, heart attacks, strokes, and broken hips. But a significant number are the elderly poor who are dependent upon our emergency departments for primary care. They are poor and cannot afford to seek care. They are unable to purchase supplementary insurance or pay their deductibles.

Annie Jones—fictitious name—waits for care in a university emergency room. She has chest pains and is short of breath. Prescriptions ordered at her last visit lie unfilled in the shabby purse she clutches to her. This morning she is even sicker than on her last visit, but she had no money to get her medicines. An illness, treatable as an outpatient last week, has become a hospital admission illness this week.

Visits of the elderly to emergency rooms hasn't captured as much attention as many of the other more dramatic events. However, emergency room staff indicate that it is as significant a problem as that posed by AIDS, uncompensated care and trauma care.

Within 10 years the over-65 age group will make up 13 percent of our population. Persons 75 and older seek treatment at about twice the rate of younger patients. Do we want to see our highly trained trauma staffs and our experts in emergency medicine delivering primary care? Could primary care be delivered outside the hospital where it belongs? Could there be some other final safety net besides the tertiary care hospital? Could it be a universal health plan which assures not only access to diagnosis but also access to medicine and treatment?

TRIBUTE TO DONALD GILMORE

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise to recognize a man who personifies the meaning of the word commitment, Donald L. Gilmore, president and CEO of the Masonic Charity Foundation in Wallingford, CT. This year, Mr. Gilmore completes 2 years as elected chairman of the board of the American Association of Homes for the Aging, the national organization of nonprofit homes and services for the Nation's elderly.

In this role, he has continued a life-long advocacy for the highest standards of health care and housing for all older Americans. The dedication Mr. Gilmore has exhibited in this and in his many other leadership roles is appreciated by all those he has served in the State of Connecticut and throughout the country.

Early on, Mr. Gilmore chose a path of professional and voluntary service that was paved by two previous generations of his family. His father and grandfather, both ministers, were veterans of the often difficult, and always rewarding, profession of long-term care administration. Mr. Gilmore served for more than a decade as director of the Wiley Christian Retirement Community in Marlton, NJ, succeeding his father and grandfather in that capacity. In that community, and in subsequent positions, Mr. Gilmore has demonstrated a deep, abiding commitment to the highest standards in housing, health care, and community services for the Nation's elderly. Through his accomplishments, each facility he has been associated with stands as an exemplary model for similar organizations dedicated to quality of care.

Mr. Gilmore's leadership in the American Association of Homes for the Aging reflects his personal crusade to improve the lives of the elderly and to assist others who have chosen aging services as a career.

I congratulate Donald L. Gilmore on the outstanding contributions he has made, and continues to make, to the elderly of this Nation. His efforts have made a profound difference to the many with whom he has come in contact.

THE SENIOR VOLUNTEER RECOGNITION AWARD OF LONG ISLAND

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, as a way of both rewarding and encouraging the volunteer spirit that characterizes one of the finest impulses of American life, I have initiated the Senior Volunteer Recognition Award to honor outstanding Long Island senior citizens who contribute to several important community programs. The award is presented to seniors who have shown through their voluntary service an inspiring commitment to the improvement and enhancement of the quality of life for the people of Long Island. This year's honorees share a spirit of compassion for others, emblematic of their belief that an investment in people truly gives the greatest return. Honored for their humanitarian efforts and personal dedication to the enrichment of life in our communities, I would like to pay tribute to this year's recipients. They include:

The Volunteers of the Helping Hands Program of the Golden Showcase for Elder Craftsmen, for the success of its outreach crafts program providing invaluable companionship to homebound senior citizens via the teaching of handicrafts. Over 250 seniors, most of whom are frail and isolated, receive weekly visits from a Helping Hands Volunteer who brings all the materials needed to assist the seniors in completing a project. The volunteer provides whatever helping hands may be needed to finish a project, taking the senior's interests, needs, and abilities into account. But the joy and comfort this program brings to both the volunteer, many of whom are seniors themselves, and the senior crafters cannot be measured simply in the number of projects completed together. Program Director Janice Spieler recollects that, in many cases, what begins as a joint venture between the visiting volunteer and his/her client senior citizen, becomes, for many, lasting friendship.

Juanita Enright, a member of the Glen Cove Senior Center, for her innovative and enlightened leadership in actively initiating new programs to make the Glen Cove Senior Center a vibrant and flourishing second home to so many of Glen Cove's senior citizens. Her sense of community spirit inspires her tireless and enthusiastic efforts to pursue activities which are vital to an active organization dependent on public support. Mrs. Enright has devoted her considerable skill and talent toward activities ranging from decorating and beautifying the center to establishing and marketing a shop on the center's premises. Always on call and in demand, Mrs. Enright continues to serve the senior citizen community in Glen Cove as its guardian angel.

Irene G. Harer, for innumerable years of loyal and faithful dedication to serving the humanitarian needs of Oyster Bay and beyond. As an active and longtime professional volunteer, Mrs. Harer serves on the boards of directors of several human-service organizations. A founding member of the Youth and Family Counseling Agency of Oyster Bay-East Norwich, Mrs. Harer is a board member of the Oyster Bay-Glen Cove Visiting Nurse Association as well as the Doubleday Babcock Senior Center in Oyster Bay to name just a few. Mrs. Harer, at age 83, is the rare individual who is as comfortable officiating at a board of directors meeting as she is officiating over lunch service to the seniors at the Doubleday Babcock Senior Center. Shunning any publicity for herself, Mrs. Harer enjoys doing whatever needs to be done to benefit the lives of others.

Mary Zaremba, as a member and volunteer of the Glen Cove Senior Center, for the organizational skill and community spirit that make the center the success it has become. Honored in 1989 as the Glen Cove Senior Citizen Volunteer of the Year, Mrs. Zaremba has become a driving force at the center, inspiring others to volunteer their time and energies. Whenever and wherever the needs of senior citizens are involved, Mrs. Zaremba enthusiastically rolls up her sleeves to get the job done. Her dedication to making Glen Cove a better place for seniors to live is reflected in the programs she has begun. Praised for her many talents, Mrs. Zaremba excels in each and every endeavor, whether she is presiding over the center's site council, managing the newest shop at the center, or simply planting a beautiful garden for the visiting seniors to enjoy.

I wish them great success as they continue their life's work to the benefit of all Long Island seniors.

CONCERN FOR ISRAEL

HON. BILL PAXON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Speaker, President Bush has handled the crisis in the Persian Gulf with extraordinary diplomacy and skill. The President has assembled an unprecedented international effort to isolate Saddam Hussein and force Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that the United States might betray its long-time ally, Israel, and in so doing, ultimately undermine the coalition standing against Saddam Hussein in that region.

Certainly, the recent deaths of 19 Palestineans in Jerusalem were tragic and should be mourned. The incident at the Temple Mount was one of the worst outbreaks of violence in this troubled land, and is truly regrettable.

However, Mr. Speaker, the United States should not move to condemn Israel before all the facts surrounding this incident are known.

We must ascertain whether the violence in Jerusalem was completely spontaneous, or was it, Mr. Speaker, a premeditated provocation?

We do know that several thousand Muslims were gathered at the Temple Mount compound, although it was a regular Muslim weekday and no prayers were scheduled. Normally, few Muslims would be found at the Temple Mount at a time like this. Tens of thousands of Jewish pilgrims were, however, gathered in Jerusalem to celebrate the holy Sukkoth Holiday.

It is aiso known that the Muslim crowd was incited by slogans like "Holy War" and "Slaughter the Jews" to attack the vulnerable Jewish pilgrims worshipping at the Western Wall, the holiest Jewish site, which is located directly below the Temple Mount compound.

Evidence further shows that the Palestinians stockpiled rocks, bottles, and the other weapons which were later hurled down upon the defenseless Jewish worshippers prior to the incident.

And radical PLO leaders are known to have arrived in the Temple Mount compound just minutes before the crowd of Muslims turned into a dangerous mob and stormed a nearby Israeli police station and burned it to the ground. The mob attacked approximately 45 Israeli policemen, locking the gates behind them, and compelling the officers to defend themselves. Only after unsuccessfully trying to disperse the mob with tear gas and rubber bullets, the policemen were forced to use live ammunition in defense of their own lives.

It is not unreasonable to question whether this violent outbreak was an orchestrated attempt to shift attention from Saddam Hussein's armed and unprovoked aggression against neighboring Kuwait.

Saddam Hussein and Yassir Arafat would benefit tremendously if the world's attention turned away from Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, and was focused on the issue of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem. They could furthermore undermine President Bush's coalition with many of the Arab nations by reigniting clashes between Israelis and Palestinians.

If the United States leads an effort in the United Nations to condemn Israel before the facts are fully uncovered, we will be sending a contradictory and dangerous message to Saddam Hussein and Yassir Arafat.

Mr. Speaker, it does not make sense to weaken our important friendship and strong alliance with Israel for the sake of political expedience. Other friends in that region may come and go, but Israel remains firmly committed to the values we have always stood for.

We would be making a terrible mistake by telling terrorists that violence pays, and Mr. Speaker, we would be making a terrible mistake by allowing terrorists to interfere with the American-Israeli relationship and with our important actions in the Persian Gulf.

SATELLITE DATA BOOSTS MAP QUALITY FOR U.S. TROOPS

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I thought this article would be of interest to you and the Members of the House, as it details the practical application of space technology.

[From Space News, Oct. 15, 1990]

SATELLITE DATA BOOSTS MAP QUALITY FOR U.S. TROOPS

(By Vincent Kiernan)

WASHINGTON.—U.S. military forces in the Middle East are using imagery from the Landsat and SPOT remote-sensing satellites to supplement and update maps of the region, according to U.S. Army officials.

The Army's 30th Engineer Battalion (Topographic), Fort Bragg, N.C., is using the satellite data to produce black-and-white and color maps for use by U.S. forces, the Army officials said.

The satellite maps are more current than maps produced by the Defense Mapping Agency (DMA)—some of which are 25 years old—and can provide insights that a convention map cannot, said Army Col. Ronan Ellis, commander of the Army Space Command, Colorado Springs, Colo.

"We're able to provide up-to-date maps and up-to-date terrain analysis information, such as new buildings, new roads and roads that are closed by blowing sand," Ellis said. "Sometimes you can find water underneath the sand."

The space command had been developing ways to use remote-sensing imagery for about a year before the Middle East crisis struck, Ellis said. Since then, specialists from the command have trained soldiers in the engineer battalion in those techniques, he said.

"It's technology transfer to operational forces," Ellis said in a telephone interview October 11.

Officials from the engineer battalion could not be reached for comment, but Ellis said that more than 5,000 black-and-white images have been shipped from Fort Bragg to forces in the Middle East.

Computer workstations are used to manipulate the satellite images and compare them to Defense Mapping Agency maps, and the engineer battalion then mass produces them, Ellis said.

Production of satellite-derived maps in which different types of features are represented by different colors is just beginning, Ellis said.

The system uses approximately 50 Landsat images and a small number of SPOT images, Ellis said. Some of the images were recorded this summer before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on August 2, but "quite a few" were recorded after the invasion, Ellis said.

The Landsat satellites are owned by the U.S. government but are managed by the Earth Observation Satellite Co., Lanham, Md. SPOT Image, Toulouse, France, operates SPOT 1 and SPOT 2. Landsat satellites scan in seven spectral bands; the SPOT satellites scan in three.

"For the most part, we've been using Landsat because we've got it, and it has those seven bands," Ellis said.

Multi-spectral imagery could help military planners identify beaches that would be most suitable for landing craft carrying U.S. soldiers, or stretches of desert with underground geological structures that could support the traffic of a column of tanks, one industry observer said.

"I would guess that this is the first time this kind of data has been used in this way by U.S. forces," he said. Further, the fact that Landsat images are being used may indicate that U.S. reconnaissance satellites do not have a multi-spectral capability, he said.

David Black, director of public affairs for the Defense Mapping Agency, said that some outdated maps were distributed in the early days of the massive U.S. mobilization to the Middle East, which began in early August.

All of the 4,000 different maps have been updated since then, Black said. He declined to discuss what sources of information were used for the rapid update.

He conceded that even the most recent maps may omit information that the Landsat satellites could supply. "If we made the map yesterday, it's going to be obsolete today, to some extent," he said.

However, he defended the agency's maps. "We feel our products are reliable," he said.

Kevin Corbley, spokesman for the Earth Observation Satellite Co., declined to discuss sales to the Pentagon, saying company policy bars disclosure of information regarding the company's customers.

However, the company has said in the past that it is selling images of the region, with the exception of sales to Iraq or companies with known ties to Iraq. SPOT officials also have confirmed that they are selling images to the Pentagon.

WORLD FOOD DAY 1990

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today is "World Food Day" 1990.

I want to take a moment to note that it is with great sadness that we celebrate this day without our good friend, and former colleague, Mickey Leland. He was always a strong supporter of the many important educational activities that took place on this day and his leadership and smiling face are sorely missed by all of us.

Ever since 1979, the National Committee for World Food Day under the leadership of its chairwoman, Patricia Young, has undertaken hundreds of projects and programs related to the world's hunger problem. Without World Food Day and the organizations involved with its celebration, the groundswell needed that made all the media events possible concerning hunger would never have existed.

Yet, despite the impressive outpouring of support, the problem of world hunger persists. A concerted effort must be made to improve the deteriorating conditions that result in tragedy after tragedy—the same conditions that allow famine and starvation to persist and remain a reality in a world with more than enough resources to feed its population. It is time for us, for our Nation and the world of nations to work to prevent disasters from occurring—to solve the problems.

World Food Day has been an effective way to raise global consciousness concerning this issue. I urge my colleagues to partake in the related World Food Day activities in their congressional districts.

TRIBUTE FOR OCTAVIO PAZ NOBEL LAUREATE IN LITERATURE

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, it is the rarest of privileges to rise today as we close out Hispanic Heritage Month to pay tribute to Octavio Paz, the 1990 recipient of the Nobel Prize for Literature.

He was born in 1914 in Mexico City, the oldest capital city in this hemisphere. As a young man, he went to Spain and sided squarely with the Republicans over the Fascists. In 1938 he returned to his native land and became politically active. In 1944 he came to the United States on a Guggenheim Fellowship, the beginning of a relationship still present today.

In the fifties, he went home and collaborated with another premiere author of his time—Carlos Fuentes. In the sixties, he served his country as Ambassador to India. In 1968 he returned to the States to teach at the University of Texas and Harvard.

It is fitting we close out this month-long focus on Hispanic heritage with a tribute to Octavio Paz, because he exemplifes and embodies so much to Hispanics throughout this hemisphere. Indeed, I know of no one living or dead, who could elaborate more eloquently, or analyze more incisively, the Hispanic mosiac.

As a writer, Octavio Paz has guided us through his "Labyrinth of Solitude" and the mystics of the Aztec calendar in "Sun Stone."

The Swedish Academy of Letters in awarding this prize to Octavio Paz have assured this Mexican national treasure of discovery by those, that for whatever reason, may not be familiar with his work.

For 60 years, Octavio Paz has been a beacon for freedom, democracy and individual rights. The academy called him a "lodestar in the tide of opinion."

Paz has accomplished what so many great writers, essayists and poets only dream of; universal acceptance by the entire population of his native land. In Mexico, Paz is read and studied by every level of society, all political parties, young and old.

Clearly, Octavio Paz is the most influential Latin American author as recognized by the most treasured literary prize in the Spanish speaking world, the Cervantes prize, awarded to him in 1981.

As a leader he has always been at the center of the storm and the eye of the hurricane. Last summer he organized an intellectual encounter, and attracted the literary geniuses of the Spanish speaking world.

Octavio Paz has been an idealist, he has been a diplomat, and he has been an ardent opponent of totalitarianism. But his most important occupation and avocation, is that of poet. For it is the poet that must make music out of our culture, it is the poet who must painstakingly write every line to paint the most accurate picture of reality from the poet's point of view. It is with the greatest sense of satisfaction that I close my remarks with Paz's explanation of why he chose poetry as his most cherished profession: "It is the hardest path, everyday there is a new best seller, not so for poetry."

Today, Octavio Paz is in New York to present his country's art exhibit titled "Mexico: The Splendor of Thirty Centuries." His relationship with the United States beginning in 1944 with a fellowship, continues through a professorship at Harvard. He is a man for this time, a man for all times.

LINCOLN STATE BANK: SEVENTY YEARS OF COMMUNITY COMMITMENT

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, on December 1, 1990, Lincoln State Bank, in Milwaukee, WI, will celebrate its 70th anniversary. I rise today to pay tribute to this institution which has served its community faithfully for the past 70 years.

Prior to Lincoln State Bank's inception, the southside of Milwaukee was without a bank to service its growing number of Polish immigrants. With this in mind, plans were set forth to organize such a bank. On December 1, 1920, the desire to open a bank became reality, as Lincoln State Bank officially opened its doors, and became the first Polish bank in the State of Wisconsin.

The history of Lincoln State Bank shows it was an immediate success, and it continued to prosper for seven decades. The strength of the institution was demonstrated, in part, by its ability to successfully weather the storms of economic instability. During the depression of the 1930's, many financial institutions suffered great losses. Thousands were forced to close. However, while virtually no institutions escaped this period unscathed, Lincoln State Bank managed to maintain a stable foundation, and survive this time of uncertainty. With its conservative business practices, and commitment to its depositors, Lincoln State Bank not only remained financially secure, but maintained its depositors loyalty as well.

There are a number of distinguishing features of this community-oriented bank. On June 1, 1950, Lincoln was the first bank in Milwaukee County to offer driveup teller service. While other banks were in the process of planning such service, Lincoln made it happen. In addition, Lincoln State Bank has kept its Polish heritage alive. Every president has been of Polish descent, and the bank continues to. work with Polish-American groups.

It is refreshing to recognize a financial institution with a major focus on community. Lincoln State Bank has demonstrated a deep commitment to not only its own neighborhood, but also to the greater Milwaukee area. It has been actively involved in the local community as well as in civil and charitable affairs. Lincoln State Bank's faith in the community as well as its diversity of involvement, has led to its distinction.

In a time when the banking industry is under stress, due in part to poor management decisions, I am proud to recognize a bank that, by proper management and civic commitment, has created a successful balance of good business and community involvement. Today I extend my congratulations to Lincoln State Bank and its president, Michael Murray. I salute Lincoln for not only its 70 years in business, but also for its good standing in the community.

RITA AND IRWIN HOCHBERG TO RECEIVE YIGAL ALLON AWARD

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to pay tribute to an outstanding couple, Rita and Irwin Hochberg of Great Neck, NY. At a special dinner on November 12, the Hochbergs will be honored as the second recipients of the Yigal Allon Award of the American Friends of the Open University of Israel, Inc.

For several years, the Hochbergs have served on the executive committee of the Open University of Israel, Inc., and have worked to offer thousands of students in Israel with the highest standards of academic studies. Its home study method allows capable and talented students throughout the country to pursue a higher education in the home environment. This home-based program allows capable and talented students to choose from 250 courses in a variety of subjects.

In addition to their commitment and dedication to higher education in Israel, the Hochbergs have been involved in many other worthy causes. Irwin is a member of the board of directors of the United Israel Appeal and the board of governors of the Jewish Agency. Rita is a member of the boards of the Joint Distribution Committee and the New York Association for New Americans and is past president of Women's American ORT.

I am happy to pay tribute to the Hochbergs as they receive the Yigal Allon Award.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ST. FRANCIS BENEVOLENT SOCIETY

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, 100 years ago hard-working Polish immigrants came to Shamokin, PA, to work in the coal mines. At that time, mine safety measures were virtually nonexistent. As a result, there often were serious accidents or, in some cases, fatalities.

In those times, there was no such thing as insurance or workman's compensation. An injured miner had to depend on his family and friends to help him and his family.

With this in mind, a group of caring and farthinking people banded together and proposed the formation of a society to help the injured and their families weather the hardships they might encounter after a death or an accident.

With the blessing of the local pastor, Rev. Florian Klonowski, these seven men: Joseph Majewski, Phillip Dyzert, Frank Kolowicz, Joseph Narwicz, Frank Glazik, Walter Stellmach, and John Kolowicz, joined together to form the St. Francis Beneficial Society on February 2, 1890.

Under their charter, the members of the society would "unite in the bond of brotherly love to promote charitable purposes so they may exist in brotherhood, harmony and unity."

These goals are truly admirable and the good that they do is to be commended. Even today, the St. Francis Benevolent Society remains one of the oldest and largest Polish-American organizations in Shamokin and the surrounding area.

Mr. Speaker, they are the neighbors we would all like to have and we could learn much from their excellent example. I know my colleagues join me in wishing the society best wishes and good luck for another 100 years.

WELCOME TO AMERICAN CONSULTING ENGINEERS

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to inform my colleagues that Dearborn, MI, welcomes with pride the fall conference of the American Consulting Engineers Council [ACEC]. The council, a federation of 51 State and regional councils, is a national professional association representing over 5,000 private-practice consulting firms which employ 160,000 engineers, scientists, technicians, and others who annually design over $100 billion in constructed public works and private industry facilities.

The members of ACEC have been instrumental in designing infrastructure and cleaning up asbestos and hazardous wastes in all of our districts. Roads, bridges, tunnels, and other water treatment facilities are all designed by consulting engineers.

Despite the fact that America's consulting engineers design virtually every facet of the United States constructed environment, over 35 percent of the Nation's population believes that engineers drive trains, manage boiler rooms, or simply do not know the importance of the engineer to the American way of life. This is why I am bringing their important work to the attention of my colleagues.

Imagine waking up in the morning and reaching for a glass of cold sludge. Engineers design the systems that bring pure water into our homes. They also build the systems that enable us to control the temperature of our homes and offices, clean up hazardous waste sites, and construct buildings that will withstand the forces of storms and earthquakes.

We rely on consulting engineers for our quality of life. They have their work cut out for them in restoring our transportation infrastructure. Nearly one-half of all bridges in the United States do not meet minimum safety standards. By the year 2000, approximately 7.5 billion gallons of gasoline will be wasted due to traffic congestion alone. The last major airport constructed in this country was opened 15 years ago, in spite of the fact that there has been a dramatic increase in airline traffic since deregulation 12 years ago. The need to improve our infrastructure is outlined in numerous studies which show that increased spending on infrastructure translates directly into increased productivity. Consulting engineers will do the design work to make the necessary improvements.

Consulting engineers also make a valuable contribution toward lowering our trade deficit. The overseas design and construction industry accounts for $24.5 billion in development projects. Studies show that if U.S. engineering firms design a project overseas, generally the construction and machinery also originate from this country. The design industry has been able to maintain its share of the world market, in spite of growing competition.

Mr. Speaker, these impressive achievements have been accomplished by an industry in which four out of five are small businesses. We can be proud that the small business spirit is so strong in our country. I join my colleagues in the Michigan delegation in welcoming these fine individuals to our State.

MRS. ANNA GREENBERG RECEIVES GREAT AMERICAN TRADITIONS AWARD

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, October 18, the B'nai B'rith Foundation will present its Great American Traditions Award to Mrs. Anna Greenberg of Annapolis.

Mrs. Greenberg will receive the award as a result of her years of service to her community, not only in Annapolis, but wherever she has lived throughout the world. Recipients of the award are a part of a select group of American citizens, who, through their dedication to their community serve as role models to young people.

Through her dedication to both education and the arts in Annapolis, Mrs. Greenberg's dedication to voluntarism has made her the first women from Maryland to receive the award. A native of Annapolis, Mrs. Greenberg has made many important contributions to her hometown through her work for the Annapolis Fine Arts Committee, the Annapolis Symphony Orchestra, St. John's College, the Anne Arundel General Hospital, the resource council, and the junior league, in addition to being a teaching guide in historic Annapolis. Mrs. Greenberg's dedication to Annapolis and the State of Maryland earned her statewide appreciation when she was named to the Governor's Council on Voluntarism.

Mrs. Greenberg is an asset to the Annapolis community, and her dedication to voluntarism is an example to us all. I congratulate Mrs. Greenberg on this occasion, and hope that many young Americans will follow in her footsteps as dedicated, active citizens.

TRIBUTE TO BOY SCOUT TROOP No. 155

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Boy Scout Troop No. 155 for their 60 years of service.

On June 10, 1930, Boy Scout Troop No. 155 was officially chartered and dedicated to serve the youth of the Mayfair community in Philadelphia.

Throughout their 60 years, the troop has focused their efforts on enhancing and serving the Philadelphia neighborhood. They deserve great recognition for their success in providing the city with an outstanding example of commitment to achievement.

I would also like to recognize those individuals who have helped to organize the troop, as well as those who have provided longstanding service and dedication to the troop. Together, Mr. Helmar Petersen, Mr. Frank Muhly, Mr. Mahlon Hornberger, Mr. Karl Weigand, Mr. Richard Hall, and Mr. Charles Guido have accumulated 273 years of service and allegiance to Boy Scout Troop No. 155.

Mr. Speaker, I join the citizens of Philadelphia in commending and thanking Boy Scout Troop No. 155 for 60 years of service to its community.

TRIBUTE TO THE NATIONAL GUARD

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, over 50 years ago, the first peacetime mobilization of the entire National Guard of the United States began. On September 16, 1940, some 63,600 officers and enlisted men in National Guard units located in 27 States were called to service. The second induction increment took place on October 15, 1940, when an additional 38,578 National Guardsmen from four States, including my home State of Ohio, were added to our Nation's Federal Active Duty Forces. Inductions of this magnitude would continue until June 23, 1941.

A total of 16 divisions were added to the Nation's troops, plus additional infantry brigades and artillery, engineer, coastal artillery, cavalry, and Army Air Corps units. Moreover, the sailors and marines of the National Guard also were called to the colors. Despite the original plan to keep these citizen-soldiers on Federal active duty for only 1 year, international events and a growing concern over preparedness in this country and in this House dictated that the 1-year tour be extend for 6 months. The opposition to this extension, while vocal for a brief time, soon disappeared when, on December 7, 1941, Pearl Harbor was attacked.

We pay tribute to the combat-readiness of the Guard divisions and their skill in absorbing and training the many draftees and reservists that had been inserted into these divisions to fill out their ranks. Three National Guard divisions, including the 37th from Ohio, were alerted for overseas movement immediately after the bombing of Pearl Harbor. It is worth noting that of the first 10 Army divisions sent overseas during World War II, 3 were National Guard divisions.

The members of the National Guard Naval Militia served with distiniction on fleet warships, while Guard Marine Corps Militia members were among the first to serve in Iceland and later take part in assault landings on islands throughout the Pacific theater. Other National Guardsmen, including members of what had been the 37th Tank Company, Ohio National Guard, were trapped on Bataan and spent 3 hellish years as prisoners of the Japanese. Still other members of the National Guard would storm Fortress Europe on D-Day, would take all that the Germans and the Japanese had to offer, and would participate in daylight bombardment raids of Europe and at Ploesti when daylight raids were considered suicidal at best.

Mr. Speaker, these guardsmen, our hometown friends, neighbors, and relatives, won a number of Congressional Medals of Honor during World War II. They were given field commissions by the hundreds and they trained selective service men and reservists with merit. They were, in truth and deed, a part of the united Army whose sole aim was to protect, defend, and uphold the Constitution and the flag of this great country.

It is fitting that this House pay tribute to the National Guardsmen of 1940 on the 50th anniversary of their induction. We commend those citizen-soldiers of 1940 for their courage, their devotion to duty, and to the cause they cheerfully supported as members of the National Guard of the United States.

TRIBUTE TO JUDGE HENRY J. BRODERICK UPON HIS RETIREMENT AFTER 20 YEARS AS A MARIN SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today and ask my colleagues to join me in honoring a fine jurist on the occasion of his retirement.

Henry J. Broderick, is retiring after 20 years of distinguished service as a superior court judge in Marin County. Since Judge Broderick's appointment in 1970, he has enjoyed a well-earned reputation for toughness, fairness, and intellectual rigor.

The hundreds of individuals who have appeared before Judge Broderick seeking justice over the past two decades have had good reason to be impressed by his dedication to the highest principles of his profession. Hundreds of attorneys have had the privilege of appearing before a jurist who adhered to the most demanding standards of preparedness and professionalism.

I wish Judge Broderick the best in his retirement, and I add my voice to the chorus of congratulations.

GOOD LUCK TO DR. NANCY SPAETH

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Nancy Spaeth, the principal of Castro Valley High School in California's Ninth Congressional District. Dr. Spaeth is leaving the Castro Valley Unified School District after 10 years of dedicated service to take a new position as associate superintendent for curriculum and instruction with the Berkeley School District.

Dr. Spaeth began her career with the Castro Valley Unified School District in 1980 and became principal of Castro Valley High School in 1982. Under her leadership, Castro Valley High School became only one of 22 schools nationwide to be selected twice by the U.S. Department of Education as a national exemplary school, once in 1985 and again in 1989. Castro Valley High was also designated as a California Distinguished School in 1988.

Dr. Spaeth has been an outstanding principal. She has worked to involve the community in the life of the school and has made use of community resources for students. She has also worked to improve the educational program through teacher evaluation and an emphasis on cooperative learning, critical thinking, and problem solving. Her administrative style of seeking input and sharing decisonmaking has contributed to a positive student climate.

This year, Dr. Spaeth was selected as California's Outstanding Principal through the In Honor of Excellence Program which is sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals. She was also the recipient of the Castro Valley School District's Larry J. Goodman Education Service Award for the 1985–86 school year. She has also been active in the Association of California School Administrators by helping plan regional conferences and participating as a panelist at forums of this organization. In 1986, she was the Castro Valley Unified School District Administrators' Association's nominee for the ACSA's Administrator of the Year Award.

Mr. Speaker, although Dr. Spaeth will be sorely missed, I wish her much happiness and success in her new position. Our loss is the Berkeley School District's gain.

W. SHERMAN DOEBLER RECEIVES PSACC MEMBER OF THE YEAR AWARD

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention today the work of Union County Commissioner W. Sherman Doebler as he has been named PSACC

Member of the Year by the Pennsylvania State Association of County Commissioners.

Commissioner Doebler received this award for his outstanding leadership and active involvement in the Union County government, and for his superior role in local and regional development activities.

Doebler is serving his fourth term as a Union County Commissioner; he was first elected in 1976. Since then, he has held the position of chairman for 12 of his 14 years in office. In this capacity, Doebler was instrumental toward the installation of the first electronic voting system used in Pennsylvania. Another first for Union County under Doebler's leadership as commissioner was the implementation of the regional emergency communications system.

Doebler has committed much of his time to various programs and activities for the State association. He has worked on the committee for the Pennsylvania Environmental Insurance Pool for over 3 years in an effort to provide extensive environmental liability insurance coverage for counties. He has also served on the Pennsylvania Counties Risk Pool Board of Directors for nearly 4 years. This agency will enable Union County residents to see a significant 4 percent reduction in insurance costs, while maintaining the broad range of insurance coverage available to them.

PSACC's award means that Doebler's constant dedication and service has benefited residents of Union County, as well as outlying areas. They are being offered outstanding services through Commissioner Doebler's quick response and appropriate guidance to problems they may encounter.

Doebler's commitment to the community proves his devotion to them, and inevitably proves he is well-deserving of this honor.

CONGRATULATING THE DOWNTOWN ROTARY CLUB ON THEIR 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BILL SARPALIUS

OF TEXAS

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. SARPAULIUS. Mr. Speaker, the Downtown Rotary Club of Wichita Falls is celebrating their 75th anniversary on October 18, 1990. The Wichita Falls Rotary Club started in 1915 as an intregal part of Rotary International which benefits people worldwide through a number of service projects. The Rotary's motto—Service Above Self—is an example for all people of every nation to follow. The Wichita Falls Rotary's commitment to service. The Rotary Club members first went to bat for the boys is as strong as ever. Since its humble beginnings in the old city hall on Ohio Street, the Wichita Falls Boys Clubs now boast five club buildings and serves over 4,000 boys each year. Much of the success of the boys clubs can be contributed to the commitment of rotary members.

In 1959 the Rotary Club helped sponsor a family that fled Hungary. Andy Chagoly, now a dentist in Wichita Falls, said if it were not for the Rotary Club, he would not be here now. He and his family escaped from Hungary on Christmas Day 1956 and the Rotary Club paid their way to the United States.

Also in 1959, the late Lt. Col. Floyd Taylor convinced fellow Rotarians here to "adopt" a squadron of airmen. Today, almost every community which boasts of a military base has a squadron adoption program, an effort that had its beginnings in Wichita Falls. In three decades since the Rotary Club of Wichita Falls followed the urgings of one of its past presidents and adopted the first squadron at Sheppard Air Force Base, the program has become one of the best tools available for good relations between military installations and host communities.

Without the financial help of the Rotary Club of Wichita Falls, hundreds of local students would find paying for college a little bit more difficult. Each year, the Rotary Club provides financial aid to Midwestern State University students in the form of internships, scholarships, and short-term low interest loans. Local high school students receive awards for annual speech and essay contests.

The Rotary Club's current endeavor is the flag project. For a nominal fee the Rotary Club will place an American flag in a person's front yard on six designated U.S. holidays. This fine example of patriotism is expected to be seen on 1,000 lawns in Wichita Falls thanks to the efforts of the Downtown Rotary Club.

Not only is the club's interest of a community perspective, the Downtown Rotary Club has a record of international service. By 1996, Rotarians hope to immunize every child in the world for polio and other diseases that threaten our youth. The Wichita Falls club has pledged $21,000 over the next 3 years to assist in this disease fighting program.

Mr. Speaker, the accomplishments of the Wichita Falls Downtown Rotary Club are too numerous for me to mention today. Their involvement in community, county, State, National, and international endeavors is example of their motto—service above self. However, the most essential element to the success of the Rotary Club of Wichita Falls is its membership. Their spirit of enthusiasm is evident in their work. With approximately 200 members, the Downtown Rotary Club serves Wichita Falls as the largest civic club. Their membership is respected—not only for each member's personal involvement in service projects—but for the club's attitude of team accomplishment.

Mr. Speaker I ask my fellow Members to join me today in congratulating the Downtown Rotary Club of Wichita Falls on their 75th anniversary. We commend them for a job well done and wish them well as they continue to better our world by—service above self.

LSC/GAO REPORT

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues the findings of a recent GAO study of Federal Legal Services attorneys' handling of migrant farmworker disputes with agricultural producers. The report clearly shows a lack of accountability for the expenditure of Federal tax dollars. This is entirely unacceptable for a program in which $320 million was appropriated last year, a program that has not been authorized for over 10 years.

Of the eight questions we asked, GAO was unable to answer, even partially, well over half. Why? Because records were incomplete and Legal Services grantees would not allow GAO access to the program records. Here is an example of what GAO was up against—quoting from the report:

> Because we did not have access to account records, we were unable to verify that the grantees had properly implemented these procedures or that the procedures provided adequate controls over the accounts, * * *.

This is not a way to "run a railroad," much less a $320 million Government-sponsored program. Representative MCCOLLUM and I plan to offer an amendment to the Commerce/Justice/State appropriations conference report which will address the problems identified in the GAO report, make Legal Services accountable to the American people and help it to provide the much-needed services Congress intended it to provide.

ED AND DOROTHY BELTZ CELEBRATE 60TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, October 16, 1990

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay a special tribute to my good friends Dorothy and Ed Beltz of Ellwood City, PA, who are celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary on October 30, 1990.

Dorothy and Ed are no ordinary couple. They met each other and have lived and worked in the western Pennsylvania area of New Castle, PA all of their lives. Their lives have been full as they have actively participated in the endeavors of their children, Bonnie, Bill, Charlotte, Harold, and David. These 5 have given in return, 11 grandchildren, and those grandchildren have enhanced Dorothy and Ed's lives by giving them 12 great grandchildren.

This couple has worked long and hard to support and encourage each member of their family circle to survive the joys and sorrows of life. At a time when they should have been enjoying retirement from their business enterprises—restaurant ownership, school bus contracting, and management of school food service—they have assisted in the rehabilitation of their beloved daughter-in-law who has courageously learned to live with paralysis as a result of a stroke, and they have instilled strength and faith to three of their lovely grandchildren who are afflicted with juvenile diabetes.

No adversity has been too great for them as they have survived the losses of their eldest and youngest sons. All of the challenges of their lives have simply made them stronger and more faithful to their ultimate goal of doing good for others.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity on the floor of this House of Representatives to offer my heartiest congratulations to two very fine people who have weathered all the adversities of life with an enthusiasm which cannot be diminished. They continue at their ages—Ed has just recently celebrated his 80th birthday and Dorothy her 76th—to serve their church as officers, they enjoy traveling, square dancing, golfing, Masonic organizational activities and continue to work tirelessly to bring happiness and comfort to their family and friends who need their attention and support.

I ask the Members of the U.S. House of Representatives to join with me in extending congratulations and best wishes to Dorothy and Ed on their 60th wedding anniversary. May this lovely couple enjoy life to its fullest and every day of the future and may all the good deeds they have done for others be returned to them fourfold.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, October 17, 1990

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

As we think about all that we should do in our personal lives and in our shared tasks, we pray, O God, that we would be open to Your spirit to see the goals of justice, mercy, and peace. But we recognize, gracious God, that You have given us minds with which to think, hearts and souls with which to feel, and hands with which to do the work before us. We pray that we will use our hands and hearts and minds and all the abilities You have given to us and thus be faithful in the duties that have been entrusted to us. In Your name, we pray. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DEWINE] lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance?

Mr. DEWINE led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2061. An act to authorize appropriations to carry out the Magnuson Fishery Conservation and Management Act through fiscal year 1993, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 5257. An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 5257, DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1991

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5257) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONTE moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill, H.R. 5257, be instructed to agree to no less than the amount contained in Senate amendment No. 76 concerning Low Income Home Energy Assistance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to focus attention upon one critical issue which our subcommittee must deal with when we go to conference. That is the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program.

Last winter, retail home heating oil prices shot up as high as $1.50 a gallon because of the record cold in December. The oil companies took advantage of this situation and stuck it to the consumer. And they stuck it to them good. While the oil industry reaped big profits, needy families had to sacrifice food, clothing, and their homes to keep warm.

This committee came to the rescue with an extra $50 million in the dire emergency supplemental for LIHEAP. A majority of my subcommittee joined me as cosponsor for the LIHEAP supplemental. I want to thank my chairman and my good friend, BILL NATCHER for working with me to get that money. That extra money took care of unpaid heating bills. It prevented utility shutoffs. It prevented families from losing their homes. Most importantly, is saved lives.

Now the poor in this country are facing economic ruin as a direct result from the Guns of August. The crisis in the Mideast has propelled oil prices to over $40 a barrel. It could go even higher. While all of us are getting hit with $1.40 a gallon gasoline, the poor are facing a long cold winter with outrageously expensive home heating oil. Already, heating oil prices have hit $1.30 a gallon in many areas. It could shoot to $1.60 a gallon and beyond.

Mr. Speaker, we are approaching another national energy emergency this winter unless we take action now to protect low income American families from becoming heating oil hostages to Saddam Hussein's adventurism.

When the House passed the bill in July, we were awaiting the reauthorization of LIHEAP, and so we had to defer funding until the Senate acted. The Senate has allocated $1.45 billion for LIHEAP for fiscal year 1991. I would have preferred to see them go even higher, but at least this is a $7 million increase over last year, reversing a downward trend over the past few years.

Exorbitant energy prices put the needy at risk of losing their homes and their livelihoods. It is outrageous to see people forced out of their homes simply because they cannot pay their heating bills. We end up paying more for emergency health and housing costs. LIHEAP and the contingency fund would be strong preventive medicine against homelessness and illness.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt this motion to instruct. We must not let Saddam Hussein play Uncle Scrooge to needy Americans this Christmas.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, on this side we agree to the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The motion to instruct was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees, and without objection, the Chair reserves the right to appoint additional conferees: Messrs. NATCHER, SMITH of Iowa, OBEY, ROYBAL, STOKES, EARLY, DWYER of New Jersey, HOYER, WHITTEN, CONTE, PURSELL, PORTER, YOUNG of Florida, and WEBER.

There was no objection.

MOTION TO CLOSE CONFERENCE COMMITTEE MEETINGS ON H.R. 5803, DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1991

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MURTHA moves, pursuant to rule XXVIII, clause 6(a) of the House rules, that the conference committee meetings between the House and the Senate on H.R. 5803, the Department of Defense appropriations bill for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, be closed to the public at such times as classified national security information is under consideration; Provided, however, That any sitting Member of Congress shall have a right to attend any closed or open meeting.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA].

On this motion, the vote must be taken by the yeas and nays.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 401, nays 4, not voting 28, as follows:

DEFENSE BUDGET SHOULD BE BROUGHT IN LINE WITH REALITY

(Mr. SCHEUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute).

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, two extraordinarily interesting events happened yesterday. The first was the announcement that Mr. Gorbachev had won the Nobel Peace Prize, according to the New York Times "for unshackling the Soviet satellites, forging the crucial compromises that will yield large cuts in Soviet nuclear and conventional forces in Europe, leading soon to a strategic arms reduction accord, we all hope, for promoting peace abroad as a precondition to reform at home, and for the promise of peace without fear of nuclear war." They said he had earned this prize for leading the Soviet Union from an era of cold war confrontation into peace.

The very same day that we read that in the paper, this House passed a military budget that equaled the height of the cold war military budgets, based on all the suppositions and assumptions of a bitter confrontational cold war face-off between the United States and the Soviet Union, with the very real specter of nuclear holocaust looming in the background.

Mr. Speaker, in my district we call this plain "meshugah," dumb, dumb, dumb. Plain crazy, man, crazy.

The Secretary of Defense, Mr. Cheney, our thoughtful former colleague, owes us a rationale for continuing the current rate of military expenditures, in this totally new, thawed environment.

Mr. Speaker, this new environment is a quantum jump from the era of cold war confrontation. We spent $2.6 trillion in the last decade, much of it justified with the threat of nuclear or conventional war with the Soviets a real and credible one.

Now, even according to Mr. William Webster, head of the CIA, the swiftly moving events in the Soviet Union, Mr. Gorbachev's insistence on multiparty democracy and his breakup of the Communist grip that at long last, has finally allowed the satellite nations and the Baltic States to seek their own futures, the dissolution of the Warsaw Pact, and spreading democracy in Eastern Europe are all irrevocable and irreversable. Secretary McNamara tells us we ought to cut our defense budget in half over the next decade.

Mr. Speaker, before continuing this level of military expenditures produced by the pressures of the cold war, what we now urgently need from the Secretary of Defense, or the National Security Council, is a long-term military risk assessment of threats we must cope with so that we can be guided by thoughtful analysis of present and future likely military scenarios in formulating our military budget. This information is urgent to establish an overall military program, including individual weapons systems, that is based on knowledge of today's and tomorrow's potential military threats around the world.

Where does the B-2 bomber, apparently designed with the single mission of penetrating Soviet airspace without detection, fit into the current appraisal of risk, at $1 billion a copy?

Where does a $20 billion expenditure on star wars fit in to a program that should be created with the knowledge that the threat of nuclear conflict between two superpowers no longer exists?

How do we justify the mobile MX, another multibillion system created to fight a threat that is no longer real?

Are any of these systems relevant to our current relation with the Soviets? How do they relate to the potential of future regional conflicts, which is where we ought to concentrate our analysis today?

Mr. Speaker, if these weapons systems aren't relevant to today's and tomorrow's military needs, we ought to have the courage, the brains, and the will to cut them out with a surgeon's scalpel.

These funds are badly needed for other, worthwhile needs. We should use them to ease the deficit, and to increase investments in education, health care, the environment, transportation, and infrastructure.

BLACK TUESDAY FOR AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was black Tuesday for American Agriculture.

At 4 a.m. the House Senate Agriculture Conference Committee, coached by the Secretary of Agriculture and Bob Grady of OMB, crafted a blueprint to dismantle farm programs.

This blueprint cuts support for producers but at the same time increases regulation, redtape, and Federal employees.

It is a recipe for disaster, cooked up at 4 a.m. in the morning like revelers after an all night party.

Then at 4 p.m. the Democrat budget is passed cutting $15 billion from farm programs, as if to say, "hit 'em again, there's still food on the table." With friends like this, who needs enemies?

This is one of those rare occasions when nothing is better than something.

The whole farm bill should be junked. It does not help producers. It does not help consumers. It is an exercise in futility.

SUPPORT THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1990

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, later today we will have an opportunity to vote and debate on the conference report on the Civil Rights Act Amendments of 1990. This is, as we know, the first major rewrite of the Civil Rights Act since its inception in 1964.

The idea and the design is to address recent Supreme Court decisions which have made the redress of grievances due to some discriminatory acts very much more difficult to achieve in courts. When it went through our Judiciary Committee and then when it was on the floor, and even into conference, there were two major issues: whether this was a quota bill; and, whether this bill allowed for unlimited damages.

During the course of debate in our committee and on the floor on these issues twenty changes were made, and seven more were made when the bill went to the second conference.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Members of the House that this is a good bill which is not a quota bill and does not have unlimited damages. I hope it is voted up today in this House.

PURSELL-KASICH PLAN, FROM THE PARTY OF LINCOLN

(Mr. PURSELL asked and was given permission to address the House for one minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, the GOP Pursell-Kasich plan came from the party of Lincoln, my favorite leader. I quote:

You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift.

You cannot strengthen the weak, by weakening the strong.

You cannot help the wage earner, by pulling down the wage payer.

You cannot further the brotherhood of man by encouraging class hatred.

You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich.

You cannot keep out of trouble, by spending more than you earn.

You cannot build character and courage by taking away man's initiative and independence.

You cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves.—Abraham Lincoln.

TIME FOR UNITED STATES TO SEND JAPAN AND GERMANY A TAX BILL

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, four out of every five soldiers in the gulf are Americans, but the former West German Chancellor, Helmust Schmidt, thinks that is not enough. Listen to what he said. He said it is deplorable that America has to ask Germany to help pay the bills in the Persian Gulf. Deplorable, Mr. Speaker, is what he said.

The truth is Germany is spoiled rotten with American cash while our taxpayers are going bankrupt, and we are raising taxes on mom and dad. How dumb can this place be?

I say it is time, and if it were up to me, to send Japan and Germany a bill. Cut taxes on Americans, and Listen here, folks, we passed a War Powers Act. If we are going to pass legislation, let us enforce it. I am tired of our guys being on the front line, coming back in body bags, and Germans complaining.

You think about that.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bosco). The Chair would like to ask those sitting in the gallery not to express themselves by applause or any other form of expression.

UNFAIR JAPANESE IMPEDIMENTS TO SERVICES TRADE

(Mr. BEREUTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, in recent history, we have had structural impediment talks with Japan, more structural impediment talks and more structural impediment talks. Following conclusion of each round of these talks we have been repeatedly assured by the Japanese that they have negotiated in good faith and they will take significant steps to reduce structural impediments to trade.

But alas, once again a Japanese Government Ministry has demonstrated a marked disregard for commitments that nations made to reduce unfair structural barriers to trade. In this instance, the Japanese Ministry of Trade has purposely granted planes from the United Parcel Service slot authority at Narita airport that effectively knocks UPS out of the cargo trade to Japan on 4 of 6 days of planned operation each week. The United States Department of Transportation had granted Japan Air Lines [JAL] and Nippon Cargo Air Lines [NCA] precisely that slot authority they requested to operate their air cargo service competitively. Consequent to this blatant exhibition of protectionism by the Japanese Ministry of Trade, Secretary Skinner blocked JAL and NCA from utilizing their landing authority. This Member would like to commend Secretary Skinner for the strong stand he has taken to force the Japanese to live up to their repeated pledges to play fair. Now the Japanese say the United State is violating the 1989 Bilateral Aviation Act. Here is the message Japan: We will step back after you stop discriminating against UPS and the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, this Member has said this before treat America fairly or say "Sayonara," Japan, to increasing shares of your best export market. Our patience has most definitely been worn dangerously thin.

HOUSE DOES GOOD JOB ON DEFICIT REDUCTION

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House did a good job last night in moving the process ahead on deficit reduction. But in watching the debate I was struck that unfortunately the focus of the debate on both sides was on taxes.

The truth is that two-thirds of the $500 billion deficit reduction comes from spending cuts, and all the talk about raising taxes ignores the very painful cuts in Medicare, the disproportionate cuts, in my judgment, in agriculture, and some cuts in defense and other cuts as well. All those were part of that same resolution.

The American people do not want taxes raised unless spending cuts are made. We made a start last night, nearly $350 billion out of $500 billion in spending cuts. But we can and we should do better, especially to reduce the defense budget further and some of the sacred cows in the nondefense budget have to also be reduced as well.

And if those are not enough, which they probably will not be, and if more tax money is needed, then the rich and not the middle class should pay, and that is what we did last night.

SPECIES INTRODUCTION AND CONTROL ACT OF 1990

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, recently I learned of a plan that is pending in the Delaware River Valley to introduce Chinook salmon, an unnatural species, into the ecosystem.

Today I am introducing on behalf of myself and my colleague from New Jersey, Mr. HUGHES, legislation which will guard against negative environmental repercussions resulting from the introduction of nonindigenous species of fish and wildlife into a habitat.

The Species Introduction and Control Act of 1990 calls for State and Federal officials to study the effects nonindigenous species would have on an ecosystem. Today we do not know what effect, if any, stocking the river with salmon would have on the fish, wildlife, and other organisms which already live there.

In the past, the introduction of nonindigenous species have driven native species into extinction, have driven others to the brink of extinction, and have upset the natural balance of many ecosystems.

SUNSHINE IN INSURANCE POLICIES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, imagine that you are a senior citizen today and your Medicare insurance does not cover as much as it used to, and your medical or prescription drug bills are astronomical. Now try to imagine who you are going to call to get answers on how to improve your health insurance coverage.

Right now there is virtually no place a senior can turn to get impartial answers that he or she needs about health insurance coverage. If you are like 11 million seniors, you will purchase supplemental insurance known as Medigap. But millions of seniors buy policies they do not need. Often seniors buy four or five policies with duplicative coverage just because they want to be safe.

Stopping this duplication and other sources of insurance misinformation could save billions of dollars now wasted on useless policies.

I rise today to introduce a bill to encourage States to set up Medigap insurance hotlines to provide consumers with comparative information about insurance policies.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill for sunshine in insurance policies for our senior citizens.

NEWTON PARK, MO, HISTORICAL PARK DEDICATION

(Mr. HANCOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, just like my colleagues, I am proud of my district.

It will be my pleasure and privilege on October 20—assuming we are not in session—to dedicate the Newton County Historical Park in Neosho, MO.

The people of Newton County have raised private funds to support this park and banded together as a community to celebrate their rich past and heritage—particularly the tradition of rural education through which generations of our people have been educated, not only in the basic subjects taught in schools today, but in the down home family values of southwest Missouri.

What makes this occasion even more unique is that this year is the 151st anniversary of the incorporation of Newton County. I was honored to take part in their sesquicentennial celebration last year.

You know, it is important for us to understand and appreciate our past. Only then can we have a clear vision of the future.

The example being set for the Nation by the people of Newton County is a fitting memorial to its proud past.

I commend the good people of Newton County and look forward to the festivities.

SAN FRANCISCANS THANK THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

(Ms. PELOSI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago today northern California was wracked physically and emotionally by the Loma Prieta earthquake. Tonight, at 5:04 p.m. California time, the city of San Francisco will celebrate the recovery of the spirit of our community. This recovery would not have been possible, Mr. Speaker, without the quick and compassionate response of the House of Representatives, our speaker, and the chairman of our Committee on Appropriations, as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

On behalf of my constituents, I want to say that while some individual and institutional hurdles still lay ahead, we are still building back. On the overall basis, San Francisco is back.

I want to extend the gratitude of my constituents, which include the Marina and Eighth Avenue which were hardest hit by the earthquake, and thank the House of Representatives. I want Members to know that as we recover, your kindness to San Francisco has not been forgotten.

WHO CONTROLS THE HOUSE?

(Mr. ROHRABACHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, as of late, we have heard a lot of moaning and groaning about the 1980's, as well as a share of inflammatory rhetoric. The tax policies back then supposedly favored the rich. The 1980's was a dark period in American history. In the 1980's, money was drained away and wasted on the defense budget.

Who controlled the House of Representatives in the 1980's is what I want to ask? If there were tax loopholes written into the tax law, who controlled the committees that wrote those tax loopholes in favor of the rich? In the 1980's, Reagan policy, some of them were permitted to come into existence. They replaced policies that were put in place by the Democratically controlled Senate and House. Those policies of the 1970's, by 1978, 1979, and 1980, gave Americans runaway inflation, national decline, national despair, high interest rates, and all of that.

Well, the policies that followed the Republican policies gave all Americans more work, more take home pay, peace and prosperity. I say it is not time to go back to the policies of the 1970's.

DEMOCRATIC PACKAGE GIVES MANY A BREAK

(Mr. OBEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, we have heard new-found Republican crocodile tears about middle income Americans, which I find amusing. The fact is that for people making between $20 and $50,000 a year, the President's summit package raised taxes 3 times as much as the House Democratic package passed last night.

The fact is that even for taxpayers between $50 and $100,000, taxes were 25 percent smaller under the Democratic package than under the President's package.

The fact is that 80 percent of all taxpayers are far better off under the Democratic package than the package supported by the President. It is the right 80 percent.

Unlike the President's package, there is no gas tax. It is much more fair to senior citizens.

There is one other sad fact. On the same day that the President of the Soviet Union won the Nobel Prize for Peace, the President of the United States announced his intention to shut down the American Government in order to push through a tax plan that protects the rich. That is a sad commentary on the White House idea of what constitutes leadership. If it were not so sad, it would be laughable.

CONGRESSIONAL CUTS

(Mr. JAMES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear a confession or admission that taxes are being raised on the middle class, by a Democrat.

Mr. Speaker, returning to the House today, after passing one of the largest tax increase bills ever produced, and trying to pass it as a deficit reduction plan. The Democrats say it soaks the rich, when in fact it squeezes the poor and the middle class with regressive taxes. It is supposed to reduce the deficit, when all it will do is cause even greater deficit spending.

However, the ultimate hypocrisy in all of this is that while the Democrats in Congress are stabbing the taxpayers in the back, they are going to increase the budget for their staff by 15 percent.

Can this be true? Yes, America, while Congress asks citizens to make sacrifices, it will not even consider the thought of making a token gesture toward doing its fair share. We can change that, and we should.

I want to call Members' attention to an amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. STEARNS] of the legislative branch appropriation bill that will come up later today.

Do we have no heart? Do we have no soul? Do we have no sense?

WEALTHY DO NOT CARRY ELECTIONS

(Mr. TORRICELLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, the goal was a $500 billion deficit reduction in 5 years. Through a combination of dramatic spending reductions and new revenues, that goal has been achieved by the Democratic plan.

Now the President feigns concern for the middle class, that they would be having higher taxes. Indeed, 75 percent of the American people would face higher income taxes of $2 per month or less. But unlike the President's plan, no gasoline tax increases, no home heating oil increases, no dramatic increases on Medicare fees. More likely, the President's concern is that there is going to be a 10-percent fee on million-dollar incomes, taxes on yachts and airplanes, and finally, restoring the principle that the highest income earners pay the highest tax rate.

Some things, Mr. Speaker, never change. The priorities of the Republican Party are among them. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL] noted the words of Lincoln. Lest the Republicans forget these words:

> If the wealthy should, regardless of the justness of the complaint, complain of the change, it is still to be remembered, that they are not sufficiently numerous to carry the elections.—Abraham Lincoln.

HOW WE DEFINE THE RICH

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, it is campaign season and so we have to define our terms if we can. We have heard calls today that we want to tax the rich, and so it is appropriate to say how we define the rich. In the category of $15 to $50,000 per year, we find 44.4 percent of the taxpayers who file tax returns in America. The Democrat tax plan defines that category of income folks among the rich because their plan will make them pay $639 more per year.

Now, the reality is people in the top 10 percent, during the decade of the 1980's, increased the percentage of total tax collections they paid from 48 to 55 percent. During that decade the bottom 50-percent decreased the percentage of the taxes they paid, from 7½ to 6.1. The reality is the Democratic plan has to reach out like an avaricious, searching for manna for additional revenue in order to feed this monster. They know full well if they want to maintain their power of tax, spend, and elect, it will take additional revenue, and they are trying to masquerade and fool the middle class of America that they are among the benefited class. In fact, they are the stuckee class.

REPUBLICAN ALTERNATIVE NO TAX PACKAGE

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, last night we voted on the Democratic budget package, but the Republicans have an alternative no new tax package to offer, and the Democrats through manipulation of the parliamentary process are preventing this from being offered.

Mr. Speaker, the majority of American people are opposed to new taxes, and our Republican package is representative of what the American people want. However, the taxpayers do not get to have an opportunity to hear this pledge.

The truth is that there is a solid, progrowth alternative to this Democratic budget that does exist, that cuts spending and cuts waste. The Democrat-controlled Congress does an injustice to the American taxpayer and undermines the democratic process by not allowing us to vote on the Republican package.

WE CANNOT AFFORD A NEVER-ENDING FOREIGN AID PROGRAM

(Mr. VALENTINE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, as we face yet another shutdown of the Federal Government, with its attendant distress for Federal workers and the millions of Americans they serve, it is time to come to grips with at least one of our many items of uncontrolled spending.

While we debate spending cuts that will do real damage to American citizens, we need to pay closer attention to our foreign aid budget.

I understand and support efforts to help other nations struck by famine, drought, and other natural and manmade disasters. I also understand the economic benefits that accrue to American companies that supply the goods purchased by foreign aid.

But we cannot afford a never-ending, always growing foreign aid program. Why can we not take the simple step of requiring aid recipients to provide us with a definite plan to achieve economic self-sufficiency, at least in the long term? Surely American taxpayers are entitled to know that their dollars are being spent for something other than undergirding the current governments of other nations and promoting endless dependence.

We seem to have an institutional problem: The American people are clearly angry about footing this bill, but the administration and the Congress are not listening. I recognize that we are unlikely to undertake a massive rethinking and restructuring of the foreign aid program at that point in the Congress, but I believe that these tasks should be among our first priorities when the 102d Congress convenes next year.

AMERICAN PEOPLE SHOULD READ BETWEEN THE LINES ON MEDIA COVERAGE OF BUDGET

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, last night, and I have to tell the American people that last night we passed out of this House a Democrat tax increase bill that raises taxes on all Americans by over $180 billion and does not cut spending, except in defense.

The spending cuts they talk about are cuts in the increase in spending. We were not allowed to bring a package offered by the Republicans that cuts spending, had true process reform and no new taxes.

I have to tell the American people that, during this time, because the media will not do it. I give an example of the Washington Post this morning. It is a news analysis masquerading as objective journalism. Nowhere in the articles in the Post this morning does it describe the Republican package. All they describe is that the Republican package did not meet that Democrat deficit target.

Mr. Speaker, the American people should read between the lines, because the media will not tell you the truth.

NO, NO, A THOUSAND TIMES NO TO CHINESE GOODS

(Mr. APPLEGATE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, no, no, a thousand times no to opening the doors of freedom to cheap Chinese goods that are going to come into the United States.

This afternoon we will have a chance to vote on most-favored-nation status, and I say no, we do not want to vote for it. If China, why not Cuba, why not Iraq, or why not any of the other despotic nations of the world?

And lest we forget, the Chinese Government murdered thousands of their own Chinese students in Tiananmen Square just a little over a year ago, only because they wanted a little bit of freedom. They wanted to speak freely, and just a week ago China violated the U.N. boycott of Iraq by sending a rare chemical that will make poison gas, make nuclear missiles, make missile fuel, and why? So that it can kill American troops in the Middle East. Is this who we want as a friend of America, and open our doors to their cheap stuff?

This is crazy. We are losing jobs. We cannot afford it, and I do not want any more cheap goods coming from any of the despots of the world into this market.

A NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, today along with at least 50 of my colleagues I will be introducing a resolution requesting that the President declare a National Day of Prayer in regard to the situation in the Middle East.

This resolution is also being introduced today in the other body by Senator CONRAD BURNS of Montana and several other Senators.

Our Nation has done this several other times during times of war or great national crisis. Our first National Day of Prayer was declared by the Continental Congress on July 12, 1775.

Our soldiers and their families have been asked to make great sacrifices during this period. As we all know, this is a very volatile situation and one which could be ended peacefully or could erupt into war at almost any time. To declare a National Day of Prayer and do it very soon seems to me to be a very small step, but potentially a very helpful step for us to take. I hope that many of my colleagues will join in cosponsoring or becoming original sponsors of this resolution and will assist to whatever extent possible in this very worthwhile effort.

THE SUPERIOR DEMOCRATIC BUDGET

(Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, last night this body passed a budget which is far from perfect, but nonetheless remains far superior to all other plans that have been submitted to this date. It begins by making the very wealthy in this country contribute more, while avoiding a gas tax and avoiding a big run-up in Medicare premiums.

We have had too much for a decade now of a system of helping the rich get richer, while sticking it to the middle class, the farmers and the elderly.

The President now expresses his opposition, because this plan does, in fact, heaven forbid, raise tax rates on the superrich and denies them yet still more tax shelters.

I believe the tax plan does take too much from agriculture, but the Republican plan or semiplan which was offered makes an equal cut, while requiring an additional $100 billion in borrowing, and was not superior.

If we do nothing, we will face Gramm-Rudman cuts this next week which will devastate farm income, as well as veterans' and senior citizen programs.

WHO IS BEING TAXED?

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, let us understand who the Democrats regard as rich. We just heard a speech about taxing the rich. The Democrats regard as rich a two-earner family making $35,000 a year. According to the National Taxpayers Union, that family under the tax plan they passed last night is going to pay an additional $2,000 in taxes between now and 1995. Those people are not rich. They are the middle class of America, and they ought not to be forced to pay for the Democrat spending in this Congress.

The problem in Congress is the fact that we have been spending money like drunken sailors. We have been doing it for years, and as a result we are now faced with massive bills.

How do the Democrats want to pay those massive bills? They say they want to take it out of the hides of the rich. They are not taking it out of the hides of the rich. They are taking it out of the hides of the middle class. Middle class America is going to pay a huge new tax bill as a result of what has happened here.

And what do we hear from the Democrats on the floor today? Well, they say it is better than the President's budget summit agreement. I would remind them that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GEPHARDT] and Speaker FOLEY signed this same agreement.

IF IT IS GOOD FOR THE MASSES TO PAY TAXES, IT IS ALSO GOOD FOR THE CLASSES

(Mr. FLAKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, today we have heard in so many speeches, some of them talking about the many problems that are inherent in the legislation which we passed on last night. It seems to me the more we listen, the more we come to the conclusion, if we were to believe what we hear, that it is bad to tax the rich, that in taxing the rich we cause a recession, we cause the Nation to have a problem, but it is all right to tax the middle class and to tax the poor. That is good for the Nation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time for us to say to the Nation, if it is good for the masses to pay taxes, it is also good for the classes.

SEEING THROUGH THE SMOKE SCREEN OF THE DEMOCRATIC BUDGET

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I hope America can see through this smoke screen. They say they are taxing the rich. A person making $21,000 a year, a single person, is going to pay 5 percent more in taxes under their plan. A married couple making $31,000 a year is going to pay 6 percent more in taxes under their plan.

A family making $44,000 with two children is going to pay $615 more in taxes under their plan. They raised taxes last night, if their bill becomes law, by $180 billion, the largest tax increase in American history.

Mr. Speaker, it is bad for America. It is bad for the economy. It is bad for everybody, but they keep telling you they are soaking the rich. They are soaking everybody. When you take $180 billion of buying power out of the American people's pockets, they will not buy shirts, they will not buy clothes, they will not buy cars, they will not buy furniture, because they can't afford it, and that means people will go on the unemployment lines.

It is recessionary, but the worst thing about last night is, the media did not report that the Republican Party had an alternative, an alternative that would reach the targets without a tax increase, that would not hurt the American economy. Theirs is terrible.

GAO REPORT RE LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

(Mr. STENHOLM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues the findings of a recent GAO study of Federal Legal Services attorneys' handling of migrant farmworker disputes with agricultural producers. The report clearly shows a lack of accountability for the expenditure of Federal tax dollars. This is entirely unacceptable for a program in which $320 million was appropriated last year, a program that has not been authorized for over 10 years.

Of the eight questions we asked, GAO was unable to answer, even partially, well over half. Why? Because records were incomplete and legal services grantees would not allow GAO access to the program records. Here is an example of what GAO was up against—quoting from the report:

> Because we did not have access to account records, we were unable to verify that the grantees had properly implemented these procedures or that the procedures provided adequate controls over the accounts,* * *.

This is not a way to "run a railroad"; much less, a $320 million Government sponsored program. Representative MCCOLLUM and I plan to offer an amendment to the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations conference report which will address the problems identified in the GAO report, make legal services accountable to the American people and help it to provide the much needed legal services Congress intended it to provide.

ONE REPUBLICAN WHO IS ALL FOR TAXING THE RICH FOR REAL DEFICIT REDUCTION

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, and Members, here is one Republican who is all for taxing the rich, they should pay their fair share. What I am not for is taxing the American people for a Congress that has no discipline.

The fact is in fiscal year 1990 under Gramm-Rudman we were supposed to have a deficit that did not exceed $100 billion. We concluded the year with a deficit that exceeded $240 billion.

Last night this House passed a deficit reconciliation plan. What did it do? It increased gross taxes by $175 billion so we could have tax expenditures of $26 billion, giving us $148 billion in net tax revenue.

We increased premiums and fees by $44 billion, which means we had a total of increased financial burden on the American public of $192 billion. Why? So we could increase spending by $132 billion. That is not deficit reduction.

FIGURES DON'T LIE, BUT LIARS FIGURE

(Mr. HEFNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a couple of points here. The other side talked about that they had a budget reduction package and they were going to get it all from discretionary spending.

In the past 10 years discretionary spending increased 21.1 percent; defense spending, which we and you supported, increased 126.4 percent; entitlements and other mandatory spending, which I and you supported, not to cut, increased 96 percent; interest under that "mean old" Jimmy Carter, the interest was $52 billion. Now, in the last 10 years it has increased 150 percent in interest, which we all have to pay whether we like to or not.

So I think for somebody to say, "You are going to get $400 billion in cuts in discretionary spending is totally bogus. "Figures don't lie, but liars figure."

MORE THOUGHTS ON THE GASOLINE TAX INCREASE

(Mr. WASHINGTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker and fellow Members, I was here waiting for another purpose and I was sitting listening to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] and I thought I made a terrible mistake last night because I was listening carefully to what he said. I started to get tense, my throat tightened up because he said $2,000. Then he said over 5 years, which is $400 a year.

I thought I made a mistake until he clarified and in that glib political way kind of glossed over the fact that we are talking about $400 a year.

Well, I feel a lot better now because everybody knows, based on the amount of gasoline which they buy, which the Republicans were going to raise 12 cents per gallon, anybody who does not beiieve they are going to pay $2,000 over the next 5 years to buy gasoline that the Republicans would have raised, I got a bridge in Brooklyn I will sell you.

THE 50th ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICA'S ENTRY INTO WORLD WAR II

(Mr. MYERS of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, 1991 marks the 50th anniversary of America's entry into World War II. It is important for Americans to commemorate this event because it allows the Nation a unique opportunity to honor these veterans in special ways.

Unlike past events marking centennial observances of the American Revolution and the American Civil War, the key players are not all gone.

A newspaper publisher from Indiana, Elbert Watson, sensed the importance of honoring those 9 million living American World War II veterans with a national observance and has promoted the idea of a week to pay tribute to our veterans.

Three State Governors have issued proclamations—Evan Bayh of Indiana, Wallace Wilkinson of Kentucky and Guy Hunt of Alabama—and minority leader BOB DOLE sponsored the legislation which passed in the Senate.

It is significant that a week calling for a national observance of the 50th anniversary of World War II includes the anniversary dates of the Battle of Midway, June 4, when our naval forces defeated the Japanese Navy, and D-day, June 6, when "the boys of Pointe du Hoc" took the cliffs at Normandy. The events and people who participated in the most tremendous undertaking in American history have shaped our economic, political and cultural institutions as we know them today. A national recognition will enable us to understand contemporary and international events better and to pay tribute to many of those people.

By calling for a national observance not only do we remember but we renew our commitment to securing the fundamental rights to freedom.

WHEN ALL ELSE FAILS, THE REPUBLICANS BLAME THE MEDIA AND THE DEMOCRATS

(Mrs. BOXER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, watch out for America. When all else fails, the Republicans blame the media. The Republican budget plan was a nonstarter. The President said he would veto the budget plan that fell short of real $500 billion deficit reduction. The Republican plan did not make the guidelines set by their own President. And now they are blaming the media and the Democrats.

The Democratic plan is fair, fair to the elderly, fair to the middle class, fair to all Americans. Two-thirds of the deficit reduction is reached by cutting spending, one-third by raising revenues. And the wealthy pay the most by far. And, very important, the elderly and most of them in the middle class are spared.

Watch out for these Republicans. If the middle-class pays an extra $50 and the wealthy pay an extra $10,000, they will get all exercised defending the middle-class when in their heart they really are protecting the rich.

REAGANOMICS AND THE GNP

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have here a graph which you might not be able to see from a distance, but it was prepared from data submitted to the Congress by President of the United States, George Bush, when he submitted his budget to the U.S. Congress.

It shows gross Federal debt as a percent of gross national product. And I will be glad to share this with all of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

It shows from 1970 to 1981 that debt decreased as a percentage of GNP. But when we passed Reaganomics, that had increased from 1981 all the way up to here through 1989. Friends, what we are debating here in Congress is who will pay for Reaganomics. I urge every American citizen to become informed because if ever you need to know what is going on in Washington, it is now, or you will have to go into your pocketbook to pay for it.

DEFINITION OF PARTY OF THE RICH

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I listened again with fascination as the gentlewoman from California explained the party of the rich.

I think since Diane Feinstein won the primary with, I believe, $3 million from her husband, it is always fascinating to have Democrats explain who the party of the rich are.

But I want to point out that, according to the National Taxpayers Union, a middle-class family of four with $34,000 in taxable income would have $2,000 in additional taxes under the Democratic plan, $2,000. Not a couple of dollars, $2,000, during the course of this budget.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that most Americans who are middle class do not want to pay $2,000 in additional taxes to the Democrats for the privilege of hearing speeches on the rich from a party whose candidate for Governor in California spent $3 million of her husband's fortune just to get the nomination.

REPUBLICANS CARPING ON THE SIDELINES AS USUAL

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, the people of America have a pretty clear choice in this budget debate. First, the Republican Party was unable to meet President Bush's guidelines and criteria for deficit reduction. I say to them, "You're out of the debate. You're merely carping on the sidelines, as usual."

Then take a look at the differences between the two parties.

Yesterday in this Chamber we heard speech after speech that, if we can just reward the rich a little more, if we can just pamper the privileged a little more, then we are going to have real economic growth in this country.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the formula the American people want. It is not what our Nation deserves.

The figures that are being used on the floor today ignore the fact that the tax increases that were passed yesterday are primarily going to hit the wealthy in America, people making an income of over $200,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, that pains my Republican colleagues, but it does not pain me or the American people. The folks who have had the party during the Reagan years ought to pay the bill, and that is what the vote last night was all about.

IN RESPONSE TO MR. DURBIN

(Mr. FAWELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], my friend, that, first of all, it is outrageous, the arrogance of the Democratic leadership which had a Republican budget it could have brought to the floor.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bosco). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL] has the time, and I think he controls it, and I do not think a parliamentary inquiry is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL] yielded to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], and the gentleman from Georgia is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I am shocked that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] is offended that a Member would answer him.

I would simply make the point that it is outrageous that the arrogant Democratic leadership in this House refused to make in order a Republican budget that cuts spending when they have waived the rule 62 times, for spending increases and when they brought to the floor yesterday a 260-page amendment which nobody read. And it is outrageous that they will not make our budget in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL] is expired.

IN RESPONSE TO MR. GINGRICH

(Mr. MFUME asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MFUME. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] fails to acknowledge that, when his own President presented a plan on this floor, he opposed it. The gentleman from Georgia fails to recognize that, when his own President set the standard for this Chamber in budget deficit reduction, his side of the aisle failed to meet that standard.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States set the high hurdles for us to clear. The Democrats have cleared the hurdles. The Republicans are trying to run under them. It does not work.

I say to the Republicans, "You have no credibility criticizing our plan until you can meet your own President's guidelines and, failing to do that, all you can do is carp and criticize on the sidelines."

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

IN RESPONSE TO MR. DURBIN

(Mr. SOLOMON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], our distinguished whip.

Mr. GINGRICH. Let me say, first of all, I love the spectacle of the left-wing Democrats defending the President's position despite the fact that the President said publicly yesterday that he would veto their budget. He was not for the budget they brought up yesterday because it raises taxes on the working American middle class by $654 according to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON]. The Democrats raised taxes.

Let me say furthermore that our budget was as close to the President's mark on cutting spending as their budget was to the President's mark if they take out the taxes he says he would veto, and I think it is outrageous that they refuse to make it in order, that they gag the Republican Party, and they gag the people of this country, and I am just surprised they are too timid to allow a straight up or down vote on spending cuts versus tax increases.

Mr. SOLOMON. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman, "Isn't it too bad the press won't print this?"

IF I WERE MR. GINGRICH, I'D BE YELLING, TOO

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, obviously the Republican Party is deeply hurt this morning by the press accounts across the country and the reaction to people across the country that they failed yesterday in their attempt to have a budget considered. They failed because their budget did not meet the test. The test was $500 billion in deficit reduction. They failed. They failed because they could not meet their own President's test.

Mr. Speaker, that was widely reported last night on the nightly news. It was widely reported in today's newspapers. They, as a party, are stung.

Why are they stung? Because this President has got to make a decision on Friday: Is he going to shut down the Government, imperil people's jobs, health, and safety, to protect the rich? Because that is the only alternative they have now, my colleagues. Either they can let the Government run, as it normally would, or they can choose to throw people out of their jobs, imperil their safety, imperil their health for the sake of making one last fight for the rich of this country who have not paid their fair share over the past decade.

Mr. Speaker, I would be yelling a little loud if I were the gentleman, too. It is interesting he wants to fight about the budget today, as opposed to yesterday when they could have offered one.

WHO WAS THAT UNMASKED MAN?

(Mr. FRANK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I want to address a security problem we apparently have in this House.

I heard the Republican leader yesterday speak strongly against any tax increases, and that causes me some concern about the security of this House because 10 days ago a person purporting to be the Republican leader stood here and urged this House to pass a tax increase. He said it was urgent that we do that.

Mr. Speaker, when someone, and I was not here at the time, but I read it in the RECORD; when a man can pass himself off on this House 10 days ago as the Republican leader and insist that we pass taxes, only to be contradicted by a man I know to be the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] yesterday, who said no taxes should be passed, the time has come to deal with smoking—I mean about security.

Mr. Speaker, my friend from Illinois was worried about smoking. Let us worry about whoever it was who 10 days ago came in here purporting to be the Republican leader and said, "Pass this bill with gasoline taxes, with other taxes," and then was confuted by the real Republican leader.

Who was that unmasked man?

THERE ARE NOT ENOUGH RICH PEOPLE TO PAY AMERICA'S BILLS

(Mr. HYDE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to every Democrat demagog this issue on the rich-poor. I thought I was at a Marxist cell meeting, hearing the politics of envy and class warfare.

There are not enough rich people to pay the bills for America. I know they are not in my district, and I know that I am not rich, but I have not heard one of the Democrats describe why the middle class are not hit by deferring the indexing for a year as the program certainly does.

Mr. Speaker, we have cited statistics where a $34,000 per year family with two children is socked with a 6-percent increase, and will one Democrat tell me if that is a rich person? Is a man making $34,000 a year rich? And how do they explain away his 6-percent increase under this program?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has expired.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 5209. An act to amend title 39, United States Code, to make nonmailable any unsolicited sample of a drug or other hazardous household substance which does not meet child-resistant packaging requirements, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 519. Joint resolution designating August 29, 1990, as "National Sarcoidosis Awareness Day".

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 2104, CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 504 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 504

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the bill (S. 2104) to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to restore and strengthen civil rights laws that ban discrimination in employment, and for other purposes, and all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are hereby waived. The conference report shall be considered as having been read when called up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bosco). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 504 waives all points of order against the conference report to S. 2104, the Civil Rights Act of 1990, and against any points of order against its consideration.

Mr. Speaker, it may seem that we have done this rule before, and if it seems that way, it is because we have. Just last week, under an identical rule, we discussed a conference agreement reached on the Civil Rights Act with the recommendation of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. We voted to recommit that bill to conference.

Mr. Speaker, the reason we did that is that this was our third attempt to reach a compromise on this piece of legislation, and in fact it is my understanding that the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor will recommend a vote on final passage today based on that new compromise that was reached.

The reason that we are in search of a compromise is that we are looking for a bipartisan bill. I know it is difficult to believe at this point in time that there would be anything that we could agree upon between Democrats and Republicans in this House of Representatives, but in fact on this bill we have reached a measure of accord, and we have a bipartisan bill prepared that we can send to the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the rule today provides for consideration of that bill, and provides that all points of order against that bill are waived.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HYDE was allowed to speak out of order.)

STATEMENT OF APOLOGY

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK]. I was very much out of line in what I said. It was said in anger. One should never speak in anger. I did. It was out of line.

Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have my words physically withdrawn from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHEAT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]. I accept it fully, as a friend, from one to another.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say we have before us today what is essentially the same rule as the one passed the other day. All points of order against this Civil Rights conference report are waived. However, as every Member knows, we committed the conference report back to conference last week, so we have today a slightly modified version to consider.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that these changes are not sufficient to satisfy the concern of the administration regarding the matter of quotas. Suffice to say, right now these further changes have necessarily entailed exceeding the scope of the conference. Therefore, all points of order have been waived.

Mr. Speaker, I have some genuine misgivings about this conference report. There is no point to be served by delaying the proceedings; so I urge that we go forward with this rule, even though I personally plan to vote against the conference report, which will certainly be vetoed by the President.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL].

Mr. FAWELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, there is not much that can be done to stop this rule, I realize. But to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] who made the statement that what we have is a bipartisan compromise, I can only say that based upon months and months of working on this 1990 civil rights bill, there is absolutely no compromise whatsoever.

Please, disabuse yourself of that. We went to the conference committee, the Republican Members, and I had a version of the LaFalce amendment with several changes which I wanted to reintroduce in this conference committee, which was held out by the gentleman as being an effort to bring together divergent views. I was gaveled out of order. I never even had the opportunity to present my amendment.

When I got to the conference committee, Senator KENNEDY was immediately given the floor. He presented an amendment that a number of people within the proponents of this legislation had worked on. Senator HATCH also had a part to play in it. But as he pointed out to the conference, he could not support this because the President did not find that it came anywhere near the guidelines which the President had.

But let us be fair. There are a lot of us who have good intentions about trying to work out an acceptable bill.

But we in the minority are used to being trampled over. My back is black and blue from being walked over in regard to every suggestion that I have tried to make in regard to this legislation.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] also followed with an amendment suggestion at this same conference committee to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] has made reference, and said let us give some thought to the remedies section insofar as having the Members of this body being subject to a jury trial in a Federal district court where compensatory and punitive damages would be awarded. Let us give some thought to that.

Mr. Speaker, they would not give him the time of day. I had to go before the Committee on Rules even before the conference committee was held because they were all set to pass a rule that waived all of the rules, and they had this one amendment all set to go, even before we got to conference.

This is commonplace around here. But then to stand up and say we have a compromise bill here and to imply, I gather, at least maybe I am misconstruing the words of the gentleman, because he is an honorable person, but at that conference all we did was slambam, and that so-called compromise which makes the bill worse was jammed through, we were stomped on, and then the next morning the same rule, which was not passed the day before, before the conference committee, was, of course, passed.

So I just want to say, hey, there is no compromise here. There is no bipartisanship to this, at least certainly not in this House, and not as far as the President is concerned. I do not think it ought to be held out in that way.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAWELL. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MFUME].

Mr. MFUME. I thank the gentleman for yielding and appreciate all of the work he has brought on the conference committee. The gentleman and I both served as conferees on this. It was a difficult process.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL] to recall the fact that it was the majority on the committee that twice went back and made modifications based on suggestions from the White House that their position be compromised.

We went through two conferences, and the second group of compromise provisions were in fact adopted.

I would go back to the gentleman's statement regarding the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER], and remind him that his position was voted on at the first conference and voted down, as best I recall, and was not allowed to be brought up again, simply because it had a vote on it.

Mr. FAWELL. Reclaiming my time, in the first conference it was my motion. Indeed, while we were in middebate on that motion we had a vote call, the gentleman will recall, and we all came back to the floor. I came back to committee and it was off, I was no longer recognized. Senator KENNEDY was recognized, and I never got a vote on my amendment. I never even was allowed to continue the debate on that very motion.

I am used to this. But please understand what I am saying is that what was brought back into conference was something that has been worked out by the elite of the civil rights movement, by the people who are in the in, who are the proponents, and you attempted to sell it to the White House. The White House said no, we cannot possibly accept this. It was dead then. It is dead now as far as I am concerned. It was no really reasonable effort whatsoever as far as I am concerned.

We will be debating this in a very short period of time. The point I want to bring out, I know this gentleman, you supported me on that motion, for instance, to have the Congress covered by the remedial aspects of this bill. As the gentleman and I know, this is the last great plantation. We know racial discrimination takes place. We know sexual discrimination takes place here which should be actionable, but we know we are, under this bill, going to become prosecutor, judge and jury, of all discrimination charges, and it is going to be business as usual, and we will all close our eyes to that. I know the gentleman does not like that.

But to say that what was jammed back into this conference committee, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] said, let us take it back to the conference committee and abide by the guidelines the President has set forth, that just is not fair, and I want to make it clear, because some people are under the misapprehension that there is some kind of a compromise here. There certainly is not, with all due respect to how much you may respect the particular substance of what is the redraft, the umpteenth redraft of this bill. You have convinced some people around here that, hey, there has been a compromise, and we have really accomplished something. But that is not so.

I want to make it very clear, and perhaps one bright light is the fact you have given me the opportunity to certainly make it clear, that there is certainly no compromise as far as the White House is concerned. There is no compromise insofar as so many of us who have labored so long and so hard to try to have some voice of reason from our point of view accepted by you folks.

Again I thank the gentleman for yielding and yield back any time I may have remaining.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, who has worked so long on this bill.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the gentleman for yielding to me and also to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL]. The gentleman has raised a point of bipartisanship. I think he has done a real service, because the gentleman from Illinois, I can assure Members, has been given more time in the committee and in conference on this issue than any other single individual. So he has had sufficient time I think to establish his claim.

Now he says it is not a bipartisan compromise. I wish to report that we went back to conference a second time, which is a very unusual procedure, at the request of a group of Republican Senators, actually. Senator HATCH and Senator SPECTER had worked with the administration on the very amendments that we went back to conference, over the opposition of some of my very dear friends in the civil rights movement, including some of the Members of Congress who voted against us to go back to conference.

May I just simply say that I will put in the RECORD a letter sent to Members of Congress, by Mr. TOM CAMPBELL, Mr. PAUL HENRY, and Mr. CARL PURSELL, three Republicans, who in their first paragraph addressed to "Dear Republican Colleague," said this: "We are writing to enlist your support for the significant bipartisan compromise on the Civil Rights Act of 1990."

So apparently the gentleman disagrees with some of his very distinguished Republican colleagues who say that they participated, and they refer to it as a bipartisan compromise.

I submit the full text of that letter which has been addressed to Dear Republican Colleague for the RECORD.

The letter referred to follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

DEAR REPUBLICAN COLLEAGUE: We are writing to enlist your support for the significant bipartisan compromise on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 as reported out of the House-Senate Conference Committee on October 12, and to ask you to join us in urging President Bush to sign the bill into law.

Some of us previously voted for the bill on final passage in the House and others voted against. We have come together recently to help craft and to support an agreement that addresses our principal concerns and those stated by the Administration. Specifically, the new compromise will:

Address the quote issue in several ways. In addition to providing expressly that the bill may not be interpreted to encourage or require quotas, the bill now requires all plaintiffs to prove which specific job practices are responsible for disparate impact, except where an employer has destroyed or does not produce the relevant records. It also makes it easier for an employer to justify a practice under the defense of business necessity. Particularly with these changes, there is no way that the legislation can fairly be characterized as a quota bill.

Maintain the language: "the mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's workforce on account of race, color, religion, sex or natural origin is not alone sufficient to establish a prima facia case of disparate impact violation."

Eliminate both compensatory and punitive damages in "mixed motive" claims where an employer proves that it would have taken the same job action in the absence of discrimination.

Further promote fairness for employers by providing that where a third party brings an unsuccessful challenge to a court order or decree, the court would have the discretion to determine how attorney's fees should be assessed as between the employer and the third party.

We ask you to join us in our effort. We are convinced that what the national interest requires is a civil rights bill that will unite Americans, not a political issue that will divide us. We believe that the compromise we are supporting offers the best chance of achieving that objective.

TOM CAMPBELL.
PAUL HENRY.
CARL PURSELL.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for being so generous to allot me this time. I was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that worked with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and the splendid Education and Labor Committee to bring this wonderful piece of legislation to the floor. I am very grateful to the Rules Committee for allowing us to be here today, and I am also grateful to the members of my staff who are here, Ivy Davis and Stuart Ishimaru, who worked long and hard on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on S. 2104, the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

S. 2104, as approved by the conference, is much like the bill overwhelmingly approved by the House in August. The Senate receded on virtually every difference between the two bodies. The conference also agreed to a number of additional Senate amendments to address remaining concerns about the bill, while, at the same time, meeting our goal of providing effective civil rights protection.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 amends the Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1964 to restore and strengthen civil rights laws that ban discrimination in employment. The Supreme Court dramatically narrowed these laws in a series of decisions last year.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 also overturns a number of other cases that have adversely affected the ability of victims of employment discrimination to find an attorney and to present a case. It also makes important changes to strengthen the civil rights laws and to fill inexplicable gaps in the law.

The major difference between the two bills was a cap on punitive damages. The House bill placed a cap on punitive damages of $150,000 for nearly all businesses, except large businesses of over 100 employees. The conference removed this small business limitation. While I do not support, and did not vote for, any cap or for removing the small business limitation, the Senate conferees were insistent on removing the limitation, and I support the bill as agreed to by the conference.

The White House reportedly still threatens to veto this bill, because it claims the bill would allow and encourage quotas. Mr. Speaker, we've heard this argument time and time again; it's time to put it to rest.

Both the House and Senate took numerous steps to address the quota issue. We continually refined the definition of "business necessity" to insure that it would follow the standards first established in 1971 in Griggs versus Duke Power Co. and which continued in effect until the disastrous case of Wards Cove versus Atonio. We also added a clear and unambiguous statement of congressional intent that this bill is not intended to require or encourage the use of quotas.

For all the talk of quotas by the White House, and by opponents of civil rights, they have never showed us a single one. There is no evidence, absolutely none, that the Griggs decision resulted in quotas. On the other hand, there is overwhelming evidence that unfair practices that have a discriminatory effect continue to exclude qualified persons from employment opportunities. These unfair practices must be eliminated from the workplace.

The language in the bill before us is language from Griggs, and demonstrates our intent to codify Griggs and its successful 18 year history. Employers were able to meet their burden under Griggs without resorting to quotas—again, there is no evidence that Griggs led employers to use quotas to avoid litigation. By restoring the Griggs standard, the requirements of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 will not lead to quotas.

We have done everything possible to safeguard against the use of quotas, while prohibiting unfair practices that have a discriminatory effect. This apparently is not enough for the White House. Without having offering a viable or effective alternative, the President says he will veto this bill. If he does, he will join the select ranks of Presidents Andrew Johnson and Ronald Reagan in vetoing a civil rights bill. Mr. President, we expected better from you.

The President's veto of the Civil Rights Act will have devastating consequences because these damaging Supreme Court cases will not be overturned. For example, we learned during our extensive hearings that hundreds of lawsuits have already been dismissed because of these decisions. Countless others have not even been filed since the Supreme Court made it virtually impossible to successfully bring an employment discrimination case.

Just this week, the New York Times reported that courts across the country are reopening civil rights cases settled by consent decree, some up to 20 years old, a situation we tried to avoid by overturning Martin versus Wilks. And these cases only begin the tidal wave of litigation, a real lawyers bonanza. For nearly 90 percent of all employment discrimination cases brought by the Justice Department from 1972 to 1983 were settled by consent decree, even though, as former Assistant Attorney General Drew Days notes, there was "plenty of evidence of discrimination."

Mr. Speaker, the Civil Rights Act of 1990 gives us the opportunity to reinvigorate the civil rights laws banning discrimination in employment. The Congress must seize this opportunity to provide equal opportunity for all Americans, even though the President apparently will abandon his responsibility to make equal opportunity a reality.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the ranking Republican on the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of issues have come up.

First of all, as to whether this effort has been bipartisan. Well, certainly in the last few weeks during the negotiations there have been three Members of the other body, Senators HATCH, SPECTER, and JEFFORDS, who have been very much involved, and on our side in the House negotiations, two Members who had voiced serious concerns with various parts of the bill during the course of debate in the House some time back, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMPBELL]. My friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], the subcommittee chairman, talked about the damages section and the changes in there.

I would like to address briefly this whole issue of quotas once again and what we have attempted to do.

The conference-reported language unequivocally rejects any suggestion that employers must resort to quotas. In no uncertain terms, it states that the "mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's workforce on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin is not alone sufficient to establish a prima facie case of disparate impact violation" and, again, "[n]othing in the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to require an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin * * *."

We further refined this to say require "or encourage."

Some still have described our efforts to address the quota concern as inadequate. They argue employers, nevertheless, will rely on quotas to protect themselves against claims that groups of employment practices have a disproportionate adverse impact on women and minority groups. This overlooks the critical point that the complaining party essentially must link a specific practice or practices to disparate impact unless the respondent forecloses that possibility.

In our recommitted conference, we adopted language that should remove any lingering ambiguity on this issue. It says that "the complaining party shall be required to demonstrate which specific practice or practices are responsible for the disparate impact in all cases unless the court finds after discovery (a) that the respondent has destroyed, concealed or refused to produce existing records * * *, or (b) that the respondent failed to keep such records."

Mr. Speaker, this is a fair and a balanced formulation.

Employment practices resulting in disparate impact, of course, may not be unlawful. The business-necessity defense comes into play at this point, and legislative language that we have incorporated in the conference report codifies, and explicitly acknowledges it codifies, the meaning of business necessity as used in Griggs versus Duke Power Co., a Supreme Court decision with an 18-year history of not leading to quotas.

The new conference report to be brought before us today modified the business-necessity definition to further clarify that certain employment decisions have enhanced protection. The proposal also facilitates proof of business necessity by specifically delineating additional categories of admissible evidence.

Mr. Speaker, that is all I will be saying at this point. I will have further opportunity during the general debate, but I thought it would be worthwhile to put on the record following my colleague's statements about damages just what we are trying to accomplish to meet the concerns of our colleagues on quotas.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, and Members, I thank my good friend from Missouri for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I will not go over the reasons why I am so interested in the civil rights bill. I think that they are rather obvious.

When I practiced law, I realized that I could have made a lot more money representing people in automobile-accident cases and things of that nature. In fact, a Federal judge once told me that I ought to stop trying civil rights cases and make a lot of money in admiralty law, and there are a lot of areas of the law where lawyers make a lot of money.

My feeling always was that somebody had to do this work, because where I started out from in life, I never had a dream of the possibility of being where I am now, so I owe something back.

What I owe back is to fight for the rights of people who were, like me, who was a poor kid who grew up about 30 to 40 feet from a railroad track in first ward in Houston, TX, who had the benefit of a modicum of an education but never had an opportunity to think that I could be a lawyer, certainly not a Member of Congress.

If I had to vote just based on how I feel inside, I would vote against this bill, but I am going to vote for it. I am going to urge others to vote for it.

You see, my problem is that even though I am 49 years old, I am still impatient. I think that when I read the Constitution that I love so much and I look at the Declaration of Independence and all of those things that those great people wrote down years ago, I believe them. My problem is I believe that those words were promises that were made to all of us, not black or white or brown or rich or poor or old or young, but those words were great because this is a great country. I believe fundamentally that one day we will be one people and we will not look at people, whether they are disabled or any other way, and I believe that this is a step forward.

Make no doubt about it, this is still a crumb from the table. We ought to be able to pass one bill one time that puts everybody on par. This bill still leaves the women behind, and that troubles me, because as a person, deep down inside, I know that we will never have equality in this country until we stop looking at each other as being different and start looking at each other as being all of God's children. That troubles me. But I plan on being in Congress a long time, and I promise that the rest of my career I will continue to remind my colleagues every session, "Do not forget the women. Do not forget this group, and do not forget that group," because, first of all, in 1964, we forgot about the disabled people. We were insensitive. We overlooked them. But we made up for that this year.

We are still leaving the women behind. As long as the possibility exists that a woman can be harassed in the workplace in the lowest, dirtiest kinds of ways and have no choice but to quit the job in order to have any compensation at all or stay on the job and suffer the indignities, we do not have civil rights yet in this country.

My problem is though that unless we pass this bill and the President signs it, I think that the signs I see around, and maybe I am just paranoid, I do not think that David Duke is a unique phenomenon. I do not think that spray-painting synagogues is a unique phenomenon. I do not think the skinhead movement is unique. I do not think that the Japanese racial slurs which were made against black people but which offend all Americans is a phenomenon. I think that we have lost our way, and we need leadership. We need to show the entire world that looks to us for direction and guidance that although we have many cultures, many religions, various kinds of people, we can live together in this country as one people, and that what we wrote down in our Declaration of Independence and what we wrote down in our Constitution means something to all of us.

We know that we still have problems, because laws are made as institutions, individuals have to enforce them.

The problem is some of our people are still prejudiced. All of us have prejudices one way or another. I believe that this is a good compromise overall. I believe that the bottom line of allowing a jury, the people who are smart enough to elect the President, the Vice President and all of the Members of the Congress is the best safeguard. I fundamentally believe that juries are not going to run away with these damage provisions. If they are smart enough to elect us, how can we look them in the eye and tell them that they are not smart enough to decide, first, whether a person has been discriminated against, and if so, how much compensation that person should have? I think that they are better equipped than we are, because we are politicians, to be able to feel the discrimination that people suffer, regardless of what race, color, or whatever kind of discrimination it is.

Let us talk about Wards Cove for just a minute and follow up on what my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], said about Griggs versus Duke Power.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said that we have lived with Griggs versus Duke Power from 1972 until 1989.

I was not a Member of the Congress in 1972, but many Members here were. Was there a great hue and cry from the business community to overrule Griggs versus Duke Power? The answer to that question is no. The business community lived with Griggs versus Duke Power.

Let Members talk about quotas. It is offensive to any person who has ever been discriminated against for the word "quotas" to come up, because quotas implies, although a person does not say it, that they are talking about unqualified people. Griggs versus Duke Power does not even reach unqualified people. First, people have to be qualified for the job. Griggs says if you have a factory, and over a period of 20 years, they have never had a woman to rise to the position of supervisor, and a woman goes to court to prove that she is capable of being a supervisor, that she ought to be able to use statisitics to show that women have been discriminated against. What is wrong with that? There is absolutely nothing wrong with that because we use statistics and figures to prove anything and everything in the world that we prove every day.

But what Wards Cove versus Atonio did is chop away at the basic fundamental right of people to get into court, because discrimination is subjective. They do not go around calling a person the "N" word or the "B" word anymore. They discriminate against a person in ways that are more subtle. So, if they discriminate in subtle ways, the only thing a person can do to prove they discriminate is to show over a period of time that they never hired any green people, or a woman, or any other group protected from being discriminated against under our law.

What is wrong with that? What is wrong with it? What is wrong with having one standard so all our people can live together? No person is looking for a handout. The only thing people are looking for is an opportunity. Nobody is asking anyone to give anyone anything. We are asking others to stop denying citizens things because they happen to be a certain color or certain sex, or Asian, or Hispanic, or whatever. We are asking people to treat all of God's children one way, one time. For 58 years there was legal discrimination against black people in this country. Where would we be if we had not been held tied by both hands, and hogtied on the ground for 58 years? There would be a lot more people in Congress for one thing. There would be a lot more blacks in business, because we were denied not just the right to vote, we were denied opportunities. We were denied achievement. We were denied power.

No person is asking for reparations. I am asking others to give people the crumbs from the table. Give the people these measly crumbs.

We have compromised on this bill. This bill is not enough, and it will not go away. The President will sign this bill because if the President does not sign this bill, then the people throughout the land who want to be skinheads, and who want to be David Dukes, and who want to find some reason to discrimimate against people, will have ammunition. We have to stop that ammunition. We are the Congress. This is not about being a Democrat or a Republican. This is for people.

All people in this country are looking to Congress. We are the elected leaders. Whether we like it or not, and I do not like it. I am this close to voting against it. I think collectively we ought to stand up and be leaders, because we are the leaders of this country and we ought to lead. It is more important that we send a signal out to the people who, in the dark of night, spray paint synagogues, who discriminate against Jewish people and Hispanic people in subtle ways. It is not perfect, but it is better than anything we will ever have, and it is more important that we send a signal that we stand collectively, shoulder to shoulder, Democrat and Republican, Wisconsin and Texas, to tell them we are not going to tolerate discrimination any more in this country.

It is the right, it is the duty of the Congress to clarify the misinterpretation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, whenever and wherever the Supreme Court has ventured from our ultimate goal of establishing a country in which discrimination does not exist.

Compromise is the art of the possible, and, although there are certain aspects of the conference committee report with which I differ, I believe that is a compromise in the true sense of that definition. Were I writing the bill, I would not, under any circumstances, provide for a cap on damages. I believe that the only legitimate cap on damages is to have a jury of intelligent people. The people in this Nation are intelligent enough to be given the most important responsibility, that of electing its leaders. Those people are the same people who serve on juries. I believe that they can find the fundamental truth and dispense justice. I would not, under any circumstances, impose a cap, particularly upon women who are just attaining the opportunity to be protected from discrimination.

What we need, now more than ever, is truth, not indifference. What we need, now more than ever, is justice, not charity. This bill provides that the truth of discrimination in the workplace will be ferreted out, found, and dealt with. This bill provides that justice, not charity, not quotas, will be the law of the land for the people who have sufferd the most because of discrimination in the workplace in our country.

In short, this bill provides not quotas, but finally, lo these many years, equal opportunity in the workplace.

The world is waiting to hear from us. We hold ourselves out as the leaders of the free world. We fashion ourselves as those who are able to show the leadership by which the peoples of the world mold their fledgling democracies. The world is waiting to hear from us as to whether we can treat all of our people fairly and with the dignity that we preach to the rest of the world.

Skinhead movement.

Defacing synagogues.

Japanese racial slurs.

Leaders must lead. One is not a leader merely by having been elected. The obligation of leadership is to lead. The Congress must lead in this endeavor to ensure that we set a proper example for all of the world as to how people, from different backgrounds, with different religions, can come together, and work together, and live together, in peace and in harmony, and without discrimination.

The background against which this legislation comes to the floor of the Congress is painful, but we must be reminded, because those who forget the lessons of history, are doomed to repeat it failures.

We must never forget the shame of slavery in this Nation, under which persons of African descent were forced into bondage, against their will, contrary to the Bill of Rights, contrary to the Constitution, and contrary to all of the things that this Nation said that it stood for. Four million human beings were owned by other human beings and lived in an area of the country where only 340,000 nonslaves lived. twelve/thirteenth's of 4,340,000 people had no rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

After slavery, legal discrimination continued. Although many people of good will in this country fought long and hard to overcome the vestiges of slavery, the Supreme Court thwarted the will of the Congress and of the people in its interpretation of the Reconstruction amendments to the U.S. Constitution when they decided the Slaughter House case, the civil rights cases, the infamous Dred Scott decision, and Plessy versus Ferguson.

After reconstruction, by force, by violence, by threat, and by artifice, black people were denied their rights in the South and in many other parts of this land. Women were not considered as good as men and had no right to vote. Hispanics and Asians had virtually no rights at all under our laws.

For 58 years, from 1896 to 1954, in many if not most parts of this land, Plessy versus Ferguson meant separate but equal. It was from 1896 to 1954 before the true meaning of the Constitution began to be applied to persons who happened to have been born black. During that 58 years, blacks had no opportunities in voting, jobs, housing, schools, careers, prestige, wealth, achievement, or power in this land. It is to overcome these unquestionable facts that we need to pass the civil rights bill of 1990.

During the 1950's a few gains, with all deliberate speed, were made on behalf of the people who had been subjected to discrimination in the past. During the 1960's civil rights began to be the topic of public discussion and the emerging rights of individuals began to be a part of our conscious decision making. During the 1970's the rights of women, Asians, and Hispanics came to the forefront. During the 1980's these magnificent efforts began to slow, and in many parts of the country came to a halt. It was at the very end of the 1980's that the Supreme Court decided the cases which we must rectify today.

It is now in the 1990's, that we all speak of a new order. The new order must be one of inclusion.

Now is the time to overcome, forever, the dark days of the period of our history which can only be looked upon with shame. Now is the time to overcome the effects of 58 years of legal discrimination in this country. Now is the time to overcome 94 years of the vestiges of Dred Scott, Slaughter House, and Civil Rights cases and Plessy versus Ferguson. Now is the time for a new order in our country. So long ago, our country promised truth and justice—we want our country back. How long must we wait for our rights to be insured? Not long. How long must we wait for the Constitution and the promises of democracy to be kept? Not long. Not long, because truth forever on the scaffold and wrong forever on the throne, yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown, standeth God within the shadows keeping watch above his own. How long? Not long, because truth crushed to Earth shall rise again. How long? Not long, because the arc of the moral universe is long, but it bends toward justice.

The Congress had to rise above the veto of President Andrew Johnson in passing the Civil Rights Acts of 1866. The Congress had the support of President Lyndon Johnson when it passed the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. We fully expect that the Congress will have the support of President Bush when the Civil Rights Act of 1990 reaches his desk. History demands the same and the country can accept no less.

This is not about being a Democrat. This is not about being a Republican. Every woman you see in a good job, every black that you see that has made progress in our society, every Hispanic who is doing well in our society, every Asian who is enjoying the benefits and the blessings of liberty, most Polish-Americans, most Irish-Americans, most Italian-Americans, have benefited from the opportunities of this good country because of strides that we have made collectively to overcome discrimination in any form and at any time by any character or individual. Now is the time for us to end forever the good old boy network by including everyone. No one is looking for a quota; everyone is looking for an opportunity. No one is asking for a handout; everyone is asking for a chance.

Americans, by and large, are good at heart. If they could see the damage that discrimination does, as we have seen, if they could feel the pain that discrimination causes, as we have felt, if they could know the disincentive that discrimination is, as we surely know, they would stand up for the women who is victimized in the workplace. They would stand up for the Asian person who is not given a chance to have a job. They would stand up for the black person who is denied a promotion because of color. They would stand up for the Hispanic person who is passed over time and time again, who trains the persons who end up being supervisor. They would stand up for the Jewish person who is the victim of quiet and subtle discrimination. They would stand up for the disabled person who is overlooked time and time again. They would stand up for the gay person who is fighting, not only to have a rightful place in our wonderful and bountiful country, but also fighting to be understood as one of God's creatures.

We have lost our way in this country, but we have not lost our will.

In response to arguments I hear from time to time about the Civil Rights Act of 1990, and about affirmative action and about set asides for those who have not had an opportunity to participate fully in our democracy, I am reminded of the story of the chief magistrate in Great Britain during the time of slavery in this country. The story is told that a ship docked in England that carried some slaves. One of the slaves set foot on English soil and people of compassion and mercy in that country took the slave in and would not allow the ship captain to reclaim the slave at the time the ship was to depart. A great legal battle ensued over whether a slave, once upon English soil, was then considered to be a freed man. The argument that I hear in opposition to the Civil Rights Act of 1990, sounds strikingly similar to the arguments made in opposition to the application of English law.

The arguments were great protestations to the unsettling affect that this would have upon commerce and how difficult it would be to administer and how important it was to honor the rights of the ship captain. After hearing arguments and looking at legal precedents the lord high magistrates said, and I quote: "Let justice be done, though the heavens may fall."

Now is the time for the Congress to stand up for truth. Now is the time for the Congress to stand up for justice. Now is the time for the Congress to stand up for America.

AN ADDRESS TO THE LOYAL CITIZENS AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, AUGUST 1865

(During 1865 and 1866 Negroes in a number of Southern cities held conventions in which they discussed their problems and formulated appeals for support and protection from the people of the nation. This address was adopted by a convention held in Alexandria, Virginia, from August 2 to 5, 1865.)

We, the undersigned members of a convention of colored citizens of the State of Virginia, would respectfully represent that, although we have been held as slaves, and denied all recognition as a constituent of your nationality for almost the entire period of the duration of your Government, and that by your permission we have been denied either home or country, and deprived of the dearest rights of human nature: yet when you and our immediate oppressors met in deadly conflict upon the field of battle—the one to destroy and the other to save your Government and nationality, we, with scarce an exception, in our inmost souls espoused your cause, and watched, and prayed, and waited, and labored for your success. . . .

When the contest waxed long, and the result hung doubtfully, you appealed to us for help, and how well we answered is written in the rosters of the two hundred thousand colored troops now enrolled in your service; and as to our undying devotion to your cause, let the uniform accalamation of escaped prisoners, "whenever we saw a black face we felt sure of a friend," answer.

Well, the war is over, the rebellion is "put down," and we are declared free! Four fifths of our enemies are paroled or amnestied, and the other fifth are being pardoned, and the President has, in his efforts at the reconstruction of the civil government of the States, late in rebellion, left us entirely at the mercy of these subjugated but unconverted rebels, in everything save the privilege of bringing us, our wives and little ones, to the auction block. . . . We know these men—know them well—and we assure you that, with the majority of them, loyalty is only "lip deep," and that their professions of loyalty are used as a cover to the cherished design of getting restored to their former relations with the Federal Government, and then, by all sorts of "unfriendly legislation," to render the freedom you have given us more intolerable than the slavery they intended for us.

We warn you in time that our only safety is in keeping them under Governors of the military persuasion until you have so amended the Federal Constitution that it will prohibit the States from making any distinction between citizens on account of race or color. In one word, the only salvation for us besides the power of the Government, is in the possession of the ballot. Give us this, and we will protect ourselves. . . . But, 'tis said we are ignorant. Admit it. Yet who denies we know a traitor from a loyal man, a gentleman from a rowdy, a friend from an enemy? The twelve thousand colored votes of the State of New York sent Governor Seymour home and Rueben E. Fenton to Albany. Did not they know who to vote for? . . . All we ask is an equal chance with the white traitors varnished and japanned with the oath of amnesty. Can you deny us this and still keep faith with us? . . .

We are "sheep in the midst of wolves," and nothing but the military arm of the Government prevents us and all the truly loyal white men from being driven from the land of our birth. Do not then, we beseech you, give to one of these "wayward sisters" the rights they abandoned and forfeited when they rebelled until you have secured our rights by the aforementioned amendment to the Constitution. . . .

Trusting that you will not be deaf to the appeal herein made, nor unmindful of the warnings which the malignity of the rebels are constantly giving you, and that you will rise to the height of being just for the sake of justice, we remain yours for our flag, our country and humanity.

(From "Great Issues in American History, Volume II," Richard Hofstadter, ed., Vintage Books, New York, 1958)

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think all Members can agree very much with what the gentleman has said, but would the gentleman not agree, if it were not for so many outsiders playings parts on so-called compromise, the gentleman and I and several others could have gotten together and worked out a very acceptable civil rights bill; is this not so?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I believe so, and the gentleman and I worked long and hard on that. It is not a perfect system, and I am just a part like the gentleman, a tiny spoke in a big wheel.

I agree that this is the last plantation. We ought to come back next year to put employees of the Congress under the civil rights bill. There is no justification for that. However, what I am saying is that we should not throw out the baby with the bath. There are enough good things in here to put the law back where we were before the Supreme Court decision, that we ought to stand for, and vote for it. I promise the gentleman that I will work with the gentleman, as long as I am in the Congress, to put the Congress under the same constrictions against discrimination as is the rest of the country.

Mr. FAWELL. But the gentleman, I am sure, would agree with me that there are very sound questions that a number of Members have?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I disagree. We raised the threshold of what is required to prove discrimination in the last compromise. Not the gentleman and I, because I voted with the gentleman. They lowered the standard for justification of discrimination.

Mr. FAWELL. We were not part of that justification, were we?

Mr. WASHINGTON. We were not on the prevailing side, but such is the nature of democracy.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER], a distinguished member of the committee.

(Mr. SENSENBRENNER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to S. 2104 which will be coming up in a few minutes. If the proponents of this legislation were half as interested in passing a civil rights bill as they are in playing politics with this issue, the Rose Garden signing ceremony would have been over and done with many months ago.

However, we are debating this bill here today. Unfortunately, the proponents have made it perfectly clear that they are not interested in crafting a true civil rights bill, but in using the issue as a political weapon that can be wielded in next month's election.

Last May, the President laid out four simple criteria for a civil rights bill: fair legal standards, an opportunity for every American to have his or her day in court, a law that would not become a bonanza for lawyers, and coverage of the congressional proponents, with the same law that will cover everyone else.

These are four eminently reasonable criteria that any free-thinking American would accept without question. But has this Congress seen fit to embrace these principles? No. Instead of having the moral and political courage to take a careful look at the test of the legislation being placed in front of them, they would rather drown themselves, like lemming, in a sea of civil rights slogans.

The President is willing to sign a true civil rights bill. The business community is willing to support true civil rights legislation. We have all the elements for consensus here except for two groups which apparently have become intoxicated with power politics, the civil rights and the Democratic leadership.

A few months ago, President Bush signed into law the Americans with Disabilities Act. I was a strong supporter of that bill. Did that issue tear the Congress apart as it was being debated on the Senate and House floors? The answer to that question was no. All sides were willing to be reasonable, to work for consensus, to work for compromise, and to work for a good bill that would help the people it was seeking to serve, and we succeeded in doing that.

In contrast, what do we see with this so-called Civil Rights Act of 1990? We see confrontation, polarization, threats, accusations, and character assassination. We see armies of plaintiffs lawyers roaming the halls of Congress, complaining about how hard it is to litigate discrimination cases and how little money they can make from those cases.

The debate here should be over treating civil rights litigants fairly, not making civil rights litigators rich. This so-called Civil Rights Act of 1990 continues to impose impossible burdens of proof, provide unlimited damages, despite the leaky cap that will be discussed later, and increased attorneys, and expert fee awards.

The sum total of these provisions makes quotas an employer's only sure defense. That is what the complaint is with this law, not whether we should not legislate against sexual harassment, not whether we should not deflate the skinheads and swastika painters and David Dukes of this world, but actually how this bill would work.

One of the things I think we are paid $96,000 a year to do is to read the text of the bills, to think them through and to make sure that they work to help the people that the bills are intended to help, and not simply legislate by what looks good on a bumper sticker. Our constituents deserve more than that. That is why this conference report should be defeated. That is why if it is not defeated, the President should veto this bill, and the Congress should sustain the veto.

Maybe then we can lower the rhetoric and work toward compromise and a workable law, just as we did with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Now, having said that, I would like to pay tribute to my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] who is not seeking reelection in this election. He will not be back with us next year, and even though he and I come from different perspectives on this legislation, I believe that he has treated those with a contrasting viewpoint with a great deal of fairness, allowing us to speak our piece and to make our points, even though we were unsuccessful in committee and in conference and on the floor of the House of Representatives.

We will miss the gentleman from California and his wise counsel, particularly as we are putting together next year's civil rights bill.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 6 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely thank the gentleman from Missouri for yielding me this time, because I must say, this conference report is one of the most painful things that I have ever sat through.

I want to answer some of the charges that have come from the other side. Please do not call this a partisan bill, please, because this is not a partisan bill. If we wanted to be partisan, we would have kept the pure bill we had in the beginning that protected women from sexual harassment that is on the rampage in this country, that would not have put a cap on damages, that would have done all the other things that we really desperately wanted to do. We would have done that and we would have sent it to the White House and said, "See, he vetoed it. He is against civil rights. We are for it." We did not do that.

We went back many a time into conference and negotiated and trimmed our sails and backed up.

I must say as a woman who sits on the Armed Services Committee and just looked at the new report on sexual harassment just in the Armed Services, this was a very hard thing for me to do, to surrender and say, "Oh, well, women, the nineties aren't your decade yet. Maybe someday we will include you fully and treat you as full-fledged citizens."

But why did this side do that? This side has been willing, and many on the Republican side have, too, there are many of them who have worked very hard with us and had terrific patience. They have been willing to compromise and try to come up with something because we have felt that there has never been a time when this country needed leadership on civil rights more. We saw tremendous backing up in the eighties. This year we are seeing the ramifications of that all across America.

We wish David Duke was just kind of a fluke. Duke is not a fluke and we all know it in our hearts. That is part of why we want to see the President of the United States speaking loudly and strongly and saying, "We are not going to retreat on all civil rights and it isn't okay to do the kinds of things that are going on and America really isn't just dreams, those are promises and we deliver."

We collect tax money equally from everyone in this country, no matter what their religion, sex, race or anything else, and this country is going to go out and protect them equally on their rights and their privileges.

You know, in President Lincoln's second inaugural address, he called upon the people of this Nation to find the part inside of them, the angel part. We all know we have that part, and we all know we have another part.

You know, in just a few minutes on this floor we saw the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] find his angel part and apologize to the gentleman from Massachusetts. That was a very moving moment.

I must say that we all need in this country to find the angel part within ourselves, because the eighties released another part, the greed part, the "do whatever you can do, tromp on them," or whatever.

As we see the rest of the world struggling to come to terms with things that we struggled and came to terms with in the sixties, it was very unfortunate to see it getting unraveled in the eighties.

Now, let me talk about the four things, supposedly, that some on the other side have complained about.

No. 1, they said Congress was not covered. Wrong. Congress covered itself last year by putting itself under title VII through an enforcement procedure. It was a bipartisan process. If people do not like it, fine, come back, give us more teeth, or do whatever you want to do, but we are moving in this direction. It is very important, and I will be out front to do whatever it takes.

No. 2, they said they want to make sure people get into court. Well, those of us on the other side want to make sure they can also get out of court, that they can get out of court with a meaningful redress, and you cannot get out of court with a meaningful redress unless you attack the next thing that the White House is saying, and that is they want fair legal standards. What do they mean by fair legal standards? If you do not allow statistics to be used, not quotas, but statistics to be used, how do you ever ascertain fair legal standards?

As a lawyer, I must tell you we use statistics for everything, whether it is damages, whether it is anything. Statistics are what you kind of look at to see if things are within a certain range that reflects whatever it is you are trying to reflect, so we want people to have those fair legal standards, and those standards must be strong.

We also hear, oh, they do not want lawyers to make so much money. I wish they had not wanted lawyers to make so much money in the S&L's. I wish they wanted lawyers not to make so much money in the Department of Defense fraud.

I mean, what is this new concern about lawyers making money? Come on.

Well, in summary, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say, that I really sincerely hope that we can get this bill out of here, as sorry as I am that it is not a better bill, and as sorry as I am that we who are women do not feel we have really been included.

But I really hope even more that the White House does not veto this bill, because I end with the haunting words I started with, and that is, Duke is not a fluke. That is on the rampage in this country, and we need strong leadership from the White House saying no more, America will not tolerate it, and I think at that point President Lincoln would start smiling again in his chair down there on the Monument.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY], a distinguished member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule. I also urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to give serious consideration and favorable consideration to the conference report.

I voted against the bill as it left the House, because yes, I had real problems about the damages provisions.

I also had some concerns relative to the assignment of legal fees on interventions or challenges to court settlement.

I have to say that most of those concerns have been addressed, and I have to say they have been addressed in a fair and equitable basis of negotiations.

Now, I want to touch on two issues. First, the issue of damages, punitive and compensatory damages. I understand the fears of the business community in terms of the cost of legal defense and of damages. That is a very real concern in a society which, in many ways, is overly litigious; but I want to review the history of punitive and compensatory damage awards. Under the Civil Rights Act of 1866, which already allows for such awards for suits based on race discrimination, in the last 10 years, from the years 1980 to 1990, it will show that out of 432 reported cases nationwide, from 1980 to 1990, only four, only four cases resulted in punitive damage awards over $100,000, and in only 29 cases were any punitive damage awards given at all.

The average compensatory damage award was under $30,000, and in 368 out of those 432 cases no compensatory damages were awarded at all.

In other words, out of 432 cases in 10 years, in only 93 instances were any punitive or compensatory damages given. I am just trying to give some perspective on the numbers, Mr. Speaker.

Now, yesterday in this House we adopted in conjunction with the budget resolution, new impositions of increased fines under OSHA alone which will amount punitively to $1.2 billion in 5 years.

Now, just by way of comparison, what does that mean? That is the equivalent of 1,200 awards in punitive or compensatory damages in 5 years of $1 million.

Now think of what all this says. Workers health and safety are important but look at this relative to worker health and safety costs. Look at it in terms of other areas in which awards are given.

Medical malpractice, product liability—and I cry for reform in that area—we have to address it. If we did in product liability and medical malpractice what we are doing here, people on this side of the aisle would be up cheering. And yet which is more fundamental to what America is? What is fundamental? Human rights is fundamental.

Now I also want to point out that in the Zipes issue, I objected on the passage of that bill when it left the House originally, that it automatically assigned fees to the original defendant for costs incurred by plaintiffs in defending an earlier action of the court.

I felt such an automatic assignment was unfair.

We have language in there now which apportions fees based on reasonableness and principles of equity. That is a vast improvement.

My concern was that it is just wrong to arbitrarily pass all costs on to the defendant in all cases.

Now I pointed out at that time that no one was looking at this, it was being not looked at by the media, not being looked at by the Post, or the Times. The ABA testimony before the committee never touched on it. The original communications from the Department of Justice never touched on it. I thought there was a fundamental potential for inequity. Now I get the issue addressed, and suddenly I am getting communications from the Department of Justice saying, "Oh, this isn't good enough," when before it didn't even matter.

Ladies and gentlemen, it is hard to attack a moving target.

We have moved this bill in many ways that I think can make it much better, and clearly one which I am ready to defend to my people back home, regardless of race, regardless of sex, regardless of creed, regardless of handicap, regardless of age. I am proud to support this bill.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield, for purposes of debate only, 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss process today. The Congress, with or without the President, makes the law. The Supreme Court interprets the law and decides issues.

There is something that has happened in America. We have laws, but then the President comes out and he influences what he considers to be the needed changes. He gets the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court then through what is called precedents, changes the law.

Now let me say something here, folks. The Constitution is clear on this. It says the Congress and only elected officials can enact law, with the concurrence of the Senate and the President.

The Supreme Court may not necessarily be representative. It can be tilted.

The Constitution protects that. It says, the Constitution says that precedents, if it tears away from the fiber and intent of the congressional act, not only should it be challenged, but it is the mandate of the Congress to change that law and address the issue.

We have got the cart here before the horse. That first Constitution allowed slavery. Women could not vote. It was Congress that had to change that law. And if we let appointed Federal judges that Jefferson said, "Beware the appointment of Federal judges, because they could take the Constitution and mold it like clay in your hands." He said, "God bless juries and God bless Congress."

The Supreme Court should not be making the laws for this country. And when the Supreme Court decision, through an act called new lawmaking organism precedents and that precedents strikes down the fiber and intent of law of the Congress, then Congress stands here.

Let me say one other thing: This quota business is a ruse. Minorities are getting screwed. There are a lot of majority people getting screwed. If this President vetoes this bill, in my opinion this President will veto the Constitution. But if this Congress allows it, this Congress will have abdicated its constitutional mandate, and it would be a sad day.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if the civil rights bill we are about to consider was truly antidiscriminatory, it would get a resounding approval by this House. But the rule makes in order a bill which promotes discrimination rather than ends it. I say that because the bill assures that quota-based policies will be an inherent part of the future job market in America.

The bill we are about to consider belies all the talk we have heard about fairness in recent days. There is nothing fair about quotas. Telling people whether they can work or cannot work, can get or cannot get the education they want, can succeed or cannot succeed based upon some numerical calculation, is wrong.

Separating society by race is wrong; using racial determinations to guide economic decisions is wrong.

Fairness demands that we become a color blind society, not a race-conscious society. Fairness demands that rights be based on personal qualification, not quota requirements. Fairness cannot be advanced in the name of civil rights if the measure approved is not real civil rights.

Civil rights should unite us, not divide us. Human rights should advance individual merit, not divide us by individual difference.

We are about to make civil rights into another case of Government statistics run amok, and that would be truly tragic.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, today we are voting on the conference report on the Kennedy-Hawkins civil rights bill. I urge you to join me in voting "no" on this legislation.

As a small businessman in my past life I strongly oppose the civil rights bill.

The conferees failed to fix the two major flaws in the bill. The Kennedy-Hawkins bill continues to provide excessive damages to plaintiffs in employment cases. The bill does not cap damages at $150,000. Let me repeat that, the bill does not cap damages at $150,000. Under the Kennedy-Hawkins bill, punitive damages can equal the sum of compensatory damages and back pay; or $150,000; whichever is greater. With no cap on compensatory damages, juries are free to make large awards.

This would destroy almost any small business and make lawyers rich.

The Kennedy-Hawkins bill fails to solve the quota issue as well. The language in the bill is still unacceptable to the administration and to me.

Let us fight for a good and fair civil rights bill. Vote down this impostor.

A list of cases where juries made large compensatory damage awards follows:

Walters v. City of Atlanta, 803 F.2d 1135 (11th Cir. 1986) ($150,000).

Williamson v. Handy Button Machine Co., 817 F.2d 1290 (7th Cir. 1987) ($150,000).

Wilmington v. J.L. Case Co., 793 F.2d 909 (8th Cir. 1986)(($400,000).

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAVENEL].

Mr. RAVENEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, if there is anything in this world I do not want to do, it is to vote against a major civil rights bill. But for 35 years I ran a number of small businesses and ran them successfully. Some not so successfully. Sometimes I just about collapsed. Three times, I believe, I just about went belly up.

It is not easy to run a business. The formula is very simple: All you have got to do is take in a little more money than you put out, and you do it consistently and you will be successful.

But it is tough. Very few people can do it.

Now the way it used to be and still is, is that if you discriminate against somebody, then whoever you discriminate against, they can make a complaint under the existing law and they can come and get you. But the burden of proof is on them.

Now if this legislation passes, that is going to reverse the process. If someone feels like you have discriminated against them, then they can make a charge against you, and then it is up to you, at great expense, to prove that you have not discriminated against them.

Man, I mean to tell you, so far as small business is concerned, that is going to be a nightmare.

So hopefully we will garner enough votes, when the vote finally comes, to be able to sustain the President with his veto, and subsequent to all that, early in the next year, a good solid civil rights bill will be presented to this Congress which will not induce the businessmen of this country to scramble around to make doggone sure they do not do anything that will get them in any problems, which in effect, the bill as presently drawn induces people to hire quotas.

I know if I was running a business and the law is as it is proposed to be changed, and I was in an area where quite possibly I was going to get sued, what I would do is, I would employ so many women and I would employ so many blacks and so many orientals to keep me out of court.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAVENEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman sounds very clear.

Does he understand, of course, that we are talking about qualified people? No one is saying, "You have to hire the women if they're not qualified."

Mr. RAVENEL. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. WASHINGTON. OK.

What the bill says is:

If you haven't hired any, and they go to court first, you have to either convince the judge or the jury that, in addition that, the person is qualified, that they are part of the available work pool, and that you didn't hire them and you have a history of not hiring them.

Now what is wrong with making someone show, one, it is legal discrimination? If they can show that there is a legitimate business reason why they have not hired any women, they do not have anything to be afraid of.

What is wrong with that?

Mr. RAVENEL. Of course, Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] says may be true, but then, please understand, I feel that quotas, however they come about, are demeaning to people, and I am opposed to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bosco). The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAVENEL] has expired.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAVENEL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with that is under this legislation any time a small business or any business has a disparate impact of employees at any level, compared to the racial or ethnic breakdown of their community, all of a sudden they are subject to a disparate impact suit. The burden of proof then switches to the business, and they have to prove, and they do not even have to identify the specific discriminatory act.

In other words, was it the interview? Was it the posting of the notice of employment? What was the particular violation?

They do not even have to indicate where they are discriminating. If there is a disparate impact, the burden of proof is on them. That is what is wrong.

Mr. RAVENEL. Absolutely. I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON], Man, you've got your finger right on the problem, and it will be a nightmare.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAVENEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] apparently has not studied carefully the conference committee report. That is cured in the conference committee report, I promise.

Mr. GUNDERSON. I have read it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Then the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] does not understand it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, before yielding back the balance of my time I might just point out that, although we spent the entire hour discussing the merits of the bill, this is not the bill as such that we are about to vote on. We are now going to be voting on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for his statement and for reminding us of the fact that we are going to be voting on a noncontroversial rule regardless of how controversial the legislation may be.

I started off this discussion on the rule by suggesting that I believe that the legislation was bipartisan. I did not mean to suggest that every Member of both sides of the aisle supported this piece of legislation. But I think it has been made clear from our debate that there are a significant number of people on both sides of the aisle, a sufficient number so that this legislation can, in fact, be called bipartisan.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to call it bipartisan legislation because I think it is important that the entire Congress stand for the principles that are embodied, not only in this Civil Rights Act, but were embodied in the original Civil Rights Act of 1964, and in some ways, Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be standing here to share in the history of civil rights that this Congress and six Presidents have led this Nation into in this country.

However, Mr. Speaker, in some ways it is a great tragedy also. I was 13 years old at the time the original civil rights bill passed. That was 13 Congresses ago, and yet we stand here trying to restore this Nation to the legal position that the country was in at that time.

What we are looking for with this civil rights bill is equal treatment under the law, equal opportunity under the law and the opportunity for equal justice under the law.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 504, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 2104) to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to restore and strengthen civil rights laws that ban discrimination in employment and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 504, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of October 12, 1990, at page H9552.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time allocated to the majority be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS], the chairman of the Committee on the Judciary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as the chairman and principal author of the bill, I want to reemphasize that we are now dealing, not with what I would call a great bill, but certainly one which is a compromise bill and a bipartisan bill. I would hope that in time we will strengthen the bill and that we will take another step in the direction of having a bill much stronger than the one which is before us.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are many things about the bill that I think must be done, and one of those principal things is for the Congress itself to take back the authority to indicate by law what is congressional intent. I think the Supreme Court has done more than deal with the constitutionality of civil rights, but it has in this instance tried to interpret and to misinterpret the intent of Congress in passing the Civil Rights Act of 1964. There are some of us who are still around who were involved in the passage of title VII, and it was, in my opinion, an attempt to get human rights in our country and not a law which would be used by those who want to be protected even though they discriminate against minorities, against women, the disabled, those who discriminate on the basis of age and who use discrimination as a way of life.

I think for the first time, therefore, we have the opportunity to say what the legislative or the congressional intent is and to say it in much more clear language than what apparently the Supreme Court is able to understand.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that that is what we should be addressing ourselves to, and perhaps, in the next few years again addressing that particular issue.

Now in 1989 there were six Supreme Court decisions, there were four others since 1985 that misinterpreted the intent of Congress, and one of those, I think, has been referred to in the discussion on the rule. One of the decisions indicated that discrimination on the job is permissible, and that certainly was not the intent of the Civil Rights Act, and, as a result of that, women, for example, among others, have been discriminated against on the job and particularly with respect to sexual harassment for which they have had no remedy for the first time.

Therefore, we are giving to women a remedy for discrimination on the job, protection against sexual harassment.

Mr. Speaker, there are other good things about the act, which I will not go into because they have been referred to, but may I make several points with respect to quotas?

It seems that there are some people who live and dream quotas, and that is all they understand. It is public relations, the big lie technically, that, if someone will continue to say something, that people will believe them. That becomes, repetition makes the thing true.

I think what those who talk about a quota bill really want is to protect discrimination. They want to give to certain individuals, selfish, greedy individuals, the right to discriminate on the basis that that is the best way to prove that they are not involved in unlawful quota discrimination. The bill amply protects against that, and I think that anyone who uses that as a basis for our position has the facts and the truth against them, and they are just simply trying to reveal their opposition to civil and human rights and to gain some political advantage by repeating that.

We have since the introduction of this bill in February of this year made 22 changes to accommodate the opposition, the business community in many instances, and the administration in many instances. It is peculiar that in 22 times of moving, some would say to weaken the bill but at least to reach the opposition, we have yet to see one single move on the part of either the administration or the business community to suggest one amendment that would strengthen civil rights. It has all been in one direction. So we have moved in that direction. As I say, we have moved so far that there are some in the civil rights community who say that the bill does not really do that much. I certainly say that that is not true, because we have for the first time certain remedies that were not present before.

We have certainly made it clear that discrimination, not only in employment but on the job, is also unlawful, and there are many ways in which we have moved to improve the civil rights position. We have obviously since 1964 moved on an incremental basis to improve it under six Presidents. Now, for the first time we have one President who says that he is not going to sign the bill. I do not thoroughly believe that the President has made up his mind, and I think that this bill may help him to make up his mind.

I will certainly indicate as time goes on the efforts that we have made in laboring long over the period since February to improve the bill, and certainly to meet the opposition. Perhaps we are far away among some of us, but certainly what has been done, I think, is a step in the right direction, and I hope that in the coming years we will move beyond the current situation.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I think we can submit this bill today as being a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. The sponsors of this legislation have labored long and hard for the past 9 months to meet the concerns of the bill's critics. We have agreed to nearly 30 substantive amendments during this process, most recently agreeing to seven new amendments, in order to meet their concerns. After 9 months of careful consideration, the Civil Rights Act of 1990 now stands as a reasoned, effective, bipartisan response to the Supreme Court's recent misinterpretations of Federal civil rights laws.

The sponsors have also gone to great lengths to reach agreement with the White House, but to no avail. Indeed, we have gone so far as to incorporate verbatim some of the administration's own proposals into the bill. Yet with each effort to meet the President's concern, the administration has responded by raising new demands, and has repeated its tired slogan that the bill's restorative provisions would somehow force employers to use quotas.

In his 1990 State of the Union Address, President Bush stood in this Chamber and told America that we must condemn racism and bigotry "not next week, not tomorrow, but right now." But the President's stall tactics for the past 9 months suggest that he does not want a civil rights bill—even one that merely restores the law—not today, not tomorrow, not next week.

If we have gained anything from these many months of fruitless efforts to satisfy the President's concerns, we have gained insight into his vision of "civil rights." These are a few examples of what George Bush's kinder, gentler America would look like:

Women and religious minorities would be treated as second-class citizens in terms of remedying injuries caused by intentional or egregious discrimination. They would not be made whole for such injuries, and they would be denied remedies now available to racial minorities.

Employers, such as fire and police departments would be free to use discriminatory practices to "resegregate" their work forces, by using hiring or promotion criteria that are not the least bit predictive of job performance.

Federal law would sanction bigotry by expressly permitting employers to exclude women, blacks, or other minorities from jobs because of customer preference.

Employers could escape any liability whatsoever for blatently discriminatory actions if other factors were also involved, and

Supreme Court decisions which stripped away longstanding civil rights protections would be enacted into statute, rather than overturned.

Is this an America we want? I can hardly think so. Indeed, the people of this Nation clearly have a far different vision of America, as witnessed by the overwhelming support the Civil Rights Act of 1990 had when the House first approved it. I can only hope the President realizes how out of step he is when this legislation reaches his desk.

Many of these issues were long ago fought, and long ago won, by citizens across this country and in this Chamber. It is a disgrace to this Nation, to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, and to the American people that in 1990 we are forced to fight these battles yet again just to hold our ground.

But if fight we must, then fight we will. Let us send our strongest message to the President, and to the Supreme Court, and to this Nation that we will not yield to a resurgence of racism, or bigotry, or prejudice. Let us send the strongest, yet simplest message possible, one that echoes the words inscribes in stone over the entrance to the Supreme Court: "Equal Justice Under Law."

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3½ minutes.

First, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I was surprised to hear that Justice Brennan would ever misinterpret the intentions of the majority in this Congress. That was a shock to me, since he made one of the decisions or wrote one of the opinions.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report, or perhaps I should say conference report No. 2. When the motion to recommit the first conference report with instructions offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] passed overwhelmingly last Thursday, I was hopeful that the legislation would be significantly improved. I should have known better.

As usual, the minority was virtually ignored in the second conference, and a set of amendments offered by Senator KENNEDY was adopted. While these changes made some marginal improvements, the basic problems with the legislation have not been resolved, even though I have heard some on my side say that they got something. I have not decided yet what it is they got.

As the administration has stated, the bill will, as before, force some employers to hire by race and sex to avoid litigation. They know they cannot win, and this will lead to a litigation explosion which will only benefit lawyers.

Mr. Speaker, I know we have heard, and we will hear again, that nothing in the bill should be interpreted to encourage quotas. That does absolutely nothing. Quota personnel practices are illegal now. Concerns with this legislation have not been over whether the bill somehow legitimizes quotas but, rather, over whether the new onerous requirements imposed under the disparate impact sections would force employers to covertly engage in quotas to correct statistical imbalances in their work forces in order to avoid that litigation that, as I said, they know they cannot win.

We have a thousand applicants for every opening here on the Hill. I would guarantee you after this legislation that you had darned sight better make sure that in spite of all those applicants, you had advertised in some minority magazine or newspaper about that opening. You had better keep every application and you had better have notations on that application that will somehow or other stand up in court, or you are in serious difficulty.

Incredibly, the bill continues to provide for punitive and compensatory damages in a radical departure from all other labor laws, amending both title VII and the Americans With Disabilities Act.

Let me make a few brief points about this compromise. The proponents have still failed to adopt language from the conclusions of the Griggs case in defining "business necessity." Instead, they have adopted a totally novel, two-pronged definition with uncertain meaning—uncertain because it is not from prior case law—but one which clearly places greater proof requirements on employers than ever existed before. Had the drafters of this legislation simply adopted Griggs, life would have been a lot easier for all of us.

The bill continues to bar many individuals from challenging court decrees under which they believe they are being discriminated against, and continues to provide liability in mixed motive cases even if the employer could prove it would have made the same personnel decision in any case. Remarkably, this provision is intended to reverse a decision by Justice Brennan, hardly a conservative Justice, who found that an employer should not be liable in such circumstances.

Finally, the bill still fails to impose any meaningful cap upon punitive damage awards, a point that other speakers will make later.

Mr. Speaker, I admit that I am not a lawyer, and these are lawyers' issues, but I can say with certainty that it will be lawyers who will enormously benefit from this legislation, and it will be both employees and employers who will suffer. Let us not mince words: Attorneys will enjoy huge fee increases as cases drag on in the courts without resolution. One of the primary purposes of title VII was to put employees wrongfully discriminated against back to work as soon as possible, with an award of lost back pay. We have erased that in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, first, nothing in the bill should be interpreted to encourage quotas. It does absolutely nothing. Quota personnel practices are illegal now. Concern with this legislation has not been over whether the bill somehow legitimizes quotas, but rather over whether the new, onerous requirements imposed under the disparate impact sections would force employers to covertly engage in quotas to correct statistical imbalances in their work forces in order to avoid litigation that they could not win.

Second, duty to identify specific practice or practices responsible for disparate impact unless relevant records destroyed, concealed, and so forth, or employer does not have such records. The bill, in fact, continues to provide at section 4(k)(1) a general rule that "disparate impact is established * * * when * * * first, a complaining party demonstrates that a group of employment practices results in a disparate impact * * *." It then carves out a new exception by stating that a plaintiff shall be required to demonstrate which "specific practice or practices are responsible for" the impact unless the court finds that the employer has destroyed or concealed the records "necessary to make this showing" or has failed to keep such records.

The retention of a general rule allowing grouping of practices makes the impact of this new section extremely unclear. For example, a plaintiff could apparently still initially allege numerous practices and leave it up to the employer to prove, later in the litigation, that the exception applies. In any case, the employer would be forced to keep "records" on all the myriad types of practices covered by this legislation to avoid a "grouping" case, adding enormous paperwork requirements. Current law only imposes recordkeeping requirements concerning impact on certain kinds of practices. Finally, it must be emphasized that the overwhelming weight of current law—even prior to Wards Cove—requires the plaintiff to identify the specific practice which is causing the impact. All of the new requirements and conditions imposed by this section are unprecedented; for example, what type of records will suffice, what does "responsible for" mean?—and will lead only to uncertainty and litigation.

Finally, it should be mentioned that court sanctions already exist to penalize employers for destroying, concealing, or failing to produce records.

Third, modifications to the definition of business necessity still retains novel two-pronged test: A selection practice or group of such practices must be justified through a showing of "significant relationship to successful performance of the job"; non-selection employment "decisions" through a "significant relationship to a manifest—replacing significant—business objective of the employer." Certain kinds of practices are now specifically listed as covered under each prong—for example, plant closings and bankruptcies—along with certain kinds of admissible evidence. However, "demonstrable evidence" is still required.

Definitions are still not from the holding of Griggs or otherwise from existing law. The identification of certain practices, while clarifying, is also alarming in that it extends impact analysis to areas where its coverage is, under current law, at best questionable. The continued requirement of "demonstrable evidence" will make proof of many practices—such as use of subjective selection criteria—extremely difficult. The change from "significant" to "manifest" is purely cosmetic. Note that the phrase "significant relationship to successful performance of the job" as used in the first prong can be found in Griggs but is not from the holding of the case and has never been used in subsequent Supreme Court decisions.

The president of the Society for Industrial and Organizational Psychology has stated that this new definition "will not meet professional standards nor be accepted by the scientific community."

Fourth, "mixed motive" cases, the new language now provides that if a plaintiff shows that an illegal factor was a "motivating" factor—the test used in the original bill as introduced—the plaintiff may recover injunctive relief, attorneys' fees, and costs, even if the employer could show that the same personnel decision would have been made in any case. The prior version used "contributing" in place of "motivating" and would have allowed punitive and compensatory damages.

Ironically, the proponents of the legislation argued that the earlier switch from "motivating" to "contributing" was an important concession to opponents. Presumably, the switch back means a lower threshold of proof is now intended. However, undoubtedly, the elimination of recovery of damages is an important change. Nevertheless, the bill still goes further than Justice Brennan's decision in Price Waterhouse, in which he concluded that no liability would result where an employer proved that the same decision would have been made in any case.

Fifth, challenges to consent decrees or other judgments in job discrimination cases. The bill retains its broad bar against challenges to consent decrees—which typically arise where such a decree provides for race-based preferential treatment—for decrees entered prior to 30 days after enactment, but sets new, less restrictive, standards for later challenges.

These changes constitute an improvement of sorts in that fewer individuals overall will be barred from their day in court. However, the Supreme Court found, in Martin versus Wilks, that individuals should not be precluded from asserting their rights against decrees which they believe have resulted in unfair discrimination unless they were parties to the original proceedings. This simple rule seems just.

Sixth, does not overrule existing case law on "comparable worth." Perhaps marginal improvement as the original conference report could have been interpreted to reverse existing law and recognize comparable worth. However, the new language does not reject the concept; it only states that nothing here is intended to overrule existing cases. Thus, the concept is recognized and preserved for future litigation. The fact that this sort of clarification is needed at all demonstrates the enormous breath of disparate impact under this bill.

Seventh, recovery of attorneys' fees in challenges to consent decrees. The Supreme Court held in Zipes that an unsuccessful challenger—often a union—to a consent decree would have to pay attorneys' fees only if its challenge is frivolous. The bill originally reversed that case and provided that such fees would have to be paid by the original defendant, typically an employer. The new version provides that the court may allocate the fees between the challenger and the original defendant based on various factors.

Minor change, although one might continue to ask why the employer should bear any of the costs when it did not bring the challenge.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, for more than 30 years I have supported and worked on civil rights legislation, and today the Members of the House and Senate, after a free and open conference, following recommittal of the conference report by this body on October 11, have returned a Civil Rights Act of 1990 that reflects a consensus between the bills that were passed by the two Houses. This consensus report contains seven important changes. These changes are in addition to the amendments in the original report that bring all employers under the protective cap on punitive damages and clarify congressional coverage. These modifications and the refinements that have been made in the language of the bill since it was first introduced help to significantly clarify this momentous legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the bill now contains language that makes it explicit that a complaining party must prove which specific employment practice or practices resulted in the discrimination complained of. This is a significant concession that assures that employers will not be required to justify the business necessity for every one of their employment practices—a process that would surely be too onerous.

A further aid to the employer in defending a charge of disparate impact is the new listing of specific types of evidence that may be offered to prove that an employment practice is "required by business necessity"—such evidence could include "testimony of individuals with knowledge of the practice." This amendment greatly simplifies the employer's response to discrimination complaints.

Other refinements were made to the bill:

A new provision clarifies that this bill does not overrule existing case law involving comparable worth.

The bill now makes clear that damages are not available in "mixed motive" employment decisions, that is, actions that are based on both nondiscriminatory and discriminatory factors.

Provision is made for additional challenges to consent decrees.

And, finally, the court has more discretion to determine how attorney's fees should be assessed in a third party's unsuccessful challenge to a court order or consent decree.

The major goals of this civil rights legislation—overturning the Supreme Court's restrictive 1989 decisions and providing a damage remedy under title VII for victims of intentional discrimination—are all preserved.

Mr. Speaker, throughout the process under which this legislation was shaped, the proponents have made every effort to meet the concerns of business people and the administration about the effect and application of this bill. Over and over again, concessions have been made, language has been changed, and clarifications have been added. Last week, we even took the extraordinary step of recommitting the bill back to conference. We have gone the extra mile, and we have met every legitimate concern of the administration.

Unfortunately, these good faith efforts at compromise and conciliation have been met with nothing but political sloganeering and counterproposals that actually would make the law worse than it is now. And, despite these efforts, the President is still threatening to veto this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need whatsoever for the President to take this step. There is no need for this President, who professes to share the bipartisan commitment to civil rights, to become only the third President since the Civil War to veto a civil rights bill.

There is still time for the President to do the right thing. However, if he chooses to exercise his constitutional power of the veto, and if that veto is upheld, it should be remembered that with power comes responsibility. In this case, the responsibility will rest solely at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, and the responsibility will be for this President to explain why, at this critical point in our Nation's history, he has chosen to throw in his lot with those who would turn back the clock of progress.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to Congress 42 years ago the first major bill I introduced was a bill which provided for assistance by the Federal Government to try to improve schooling conditions of people of minority in our country. The first speech I made on the floor of the House, which was in January 1949, was in behalf of that legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say most of that legislation has now become law under the impact legislation which I also supported in that Congress.

Of all the things that I have joy about in being a Congressman for 42 years, the most satisfying, the most joyful part of my service here, has been to be able to do something to be helpful to those who have been so long overlooked.

Mr. Speaker, it was a great pleasure for me to join in the voting rights bill and other things that have been done to help minorities to be in the mainstream of America. I am not only glad because of what the opportunities are that have been made available to those in the minority, but I am glad because the heart of America is warmer today, more responsive, and we do not talk about "them and us," we talk about ourselves, embracing all minorities in this country.

Mr. Speaker, this is a thing that gives me great personal satisfaction. Of all the things that have happened in the last 40 years that I have been here this is the thing that brings me the greatest joy.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to share that with Members. I hope Members are in favor of this legislation, because I think this attempts to correct some of the things that need correction.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I welcomed the opportunity to participate in the reconvened conference on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 and to sign the new conference report. We reached agreement—I am pleased to report—on the compromise proposal that I described to this body last week.

This modified version of the Civil Rights Act of 1990—which we will vote on today—definitively answers the quota argument by providing further assurances that businesses will have no reason to resort to employment-related quotas. We also improve the original confernece reported language by eliminating potential liability for damages in mixed motive cases, restoring opportunities—in appropriate circumstances—to challenge judgments and consent decrees, foreclosing arguments that this legislation overrules judicial decisions on comparable worth, and addressing concern about fairness in awards of attorney's fees.

Although the conference report we signed in late September reflected our best efforts at the time to safeguard employment rights without burdening employers, discussions during the following 2 weeks convinced many of us that we could do even more to allay fears about this legislation. My hope is that the improvements we have fashioned will increase the prospects of bringing this important civil rights effort to a successful conclusion in 1990.

The legislation before us is balanced in its approach. It both advances important civil rights objectives and accommodates the needs of employers. We discourage discriminatory practices in the work place without requiring, encouraging, or facilitating reliance on quotas.

As Congress prepares to take formal action that will result in sending the Civil Rights Act of 1990 to the President, we can take justifiable pride in this renewed expression of our national commitment to removing barriers that limit employment opportunities for so many of our citizens. Faced with restrictive and counterproductive Supreme Court interpretations of civil rights laws designed to protect women and members of minority groups, we recognize that it is incumbent on us to enact new legislation preserving and strengthening essential safeguards.

As each day passes, the evidence continues to accumulate that the Court's decisions are in fact frustrating the purposes of our civil rights laws. For example, as a result of the Supreme Court's disastrous decision last year in the Patterson case, more than 200 discrimination claims have been thrown out of the courts. This includes many cases where trial courts found that victims had suffered egregious racial harassment and bias, only to see verdicts in their favor overruled as a result of Patterson.

As a result of the Supreme Court's Wilks decision, divisive and disruptive lawsuits have been filed in 10 cities seeking to reopen court judgments and consent decrees in discrimination cases, including remedies that had worked well for 20 years. Wilks not only has damaged civil rights plaintiffs but also has harmed businesses and other employers by making it difficult or impossible to settle discrimination cases and forcing them to spend huge sums to defend prior decrees. Birmingham, AL has had to spend in excess of a million dollars for this reason as a result of Wilks.

Clearly, it is time for Congress to act.

I express appreciation to the many Republican colleagues—in both bodies—who joined in the search for alternative formulations of key provisions and to the minority leadership for their recognition of our concerns. The leadership conference on civil rights also deserves commendation for its tireless participation in the effort to forge a compromise.

I urge the Members of this body to join me in voting to approve the conference report.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], a distinguished member of the committee and of the subcommittee.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in this Chamber and in this committee on the civil rights bills for a long time, since the first major bill, of course, in 1964, the omnibus civil rights bill, and then 1965 the voting rights bill, and in 1968, a fair housing bill.

Each time there is a repeat of the same complaints from our opponents, that it is a bonanza for lawyers, an invitation for lawsuits, and that these civil rights laws will be a disaster for the country and divide the country.

Mr. Speaker, historically, in each and every instance, they have been 100 percent wrong.

The very civil rights laws that we have enacted in this country have been America's proudest moments. We are the envy of the world because we are trying, by law, in our churches, in our neighborhoods, and in our Federal Government, to live together as various races and colors and religions, and to get along. And the chief way to do so is through strong civil rights laws.

We have negotiated and negotiated on this bill. The Supreme Court decisions, which the other side very conveniently ignores, were very, very damaging to the rights of Americans, especially women and minority Americans. All over the country lawsuits are being dropped where severe discrimination has been proven or could be proven. Many, many lawsuits will never be filed. Consent decrees agreed to by the parties and signed by Federal district judges, some 20 years old, are going to be reopened as a result of the Wilks decision. How unfair. All of these cases could have been won the hard way, without a consent decree, and to reopen them is a travesty. The Supreme Court made a great mistake in the Wilks decision.

Those of us here in Congress that deal in civil rights on a daily basis are finding that since the early 1980's instead of breaking new ground, we are spending more and more time in reversing unfortunate decisions of a conservative Supreme Court. All of the cases that we are attempting in this bill to reverse are decisions of a Ronald Reagan Supreme Court that are extremely unfortunate.

I really hope that President Bush will remember his history, and remind himself, as my chairman said, that only two other Presidents have vetoed civil rights bills, Andrew Johnson after the Civil War and Ronald Reagan when he vetoed the Civil Rights Restoration Act in 1988. And to the credit of the Congress, we overwhelmingly overrode that veto. I predict that if President Bush vetoes this civil rights bill, Mr. Speaker, that this House and the Senate will override the veto.

What the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] said a little while ago is real. We are going in the wrong direction in this country. Those of us who have some sort of a leadership job must lead the way back toward the spirit of the various laws that we have passed since 1964.

The wrong way to do it, the wrong way to lead the country would be for the President to veto this law.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL].

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I rise in opposition to the conference report and this umpteenth rewriting of the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Mr. Speaker, make no mistake, this bill is a quotas bill. It was argued there are no quotas in the bill because the bill states there are no quotas in the bill.

This reminds me of a Rene Magritte painting of a briar pipe, and it is entitled "This is Not a Pipe."

Mr. Speaker, simply stating that this bill is not a quotas bill does not mean that it is not a quotas bill. There are several reasons, and I will mention just a few and there are many more.

First, the troublesome issue remains of the use of statistics alone in order to prove unintentional discrimination. This bill allows a complainant to prove his case through an alleged statistical disparity alone, because the employer failed to keep records necessary to support the complainant's case. That is what it says. The proposal continues to assume that any racial or gender imbalance in the workplace is caused by something the employer is doing, when of course there are any number of innocent reasons for the imbalance, far removed from the workplace, and yes, far removed from any records that an employer would keep.

Second, an unduly strict definition of business necessity will lead employers to abandon attempts to use merit-related employee selection criteria. Business necessity is the employer's only defense. In an unintentional discrimination case where he or she, the accused, not the accuser, but the accused has the burden of proof.

The business necessity defense is still not based on a simple-manifest relationship to the employment or to the business in question, and that is what Griggs actually said. Rather it requires that the employment practices must bear a significant relationship to a successful performance on the job. This penalizes the employers who attempt to set their standards for optimal rather than minimal successful job performance, meaning that the less qualified will be preferred over better qualified simply because of minority origins.

Yet, Griggs stated that employers may set their standards as high as they wish as long as they were consistent with equal employment policy.

Third, even if an employer meets the strict standards of business necessity and proves that he has a lawful employment practice, this bill would make the lawful employment practice ipso facto suddenly unlawful merely by saying that hey, there is an alternative employment practice out there which would bring about less disparate impact, cost apparently being of no concern at all to the drafter.

Mr. Speaker, an employer should have the basic, elementary right to use an employment practice if he meets the strict and difficult standards of business necessity. He is not even given that in this bill.

Columnist Thomas Sowell summed it up rather well when he said:

> In many of these cases (unintentional discrimination) nobody on either side can prove anything, so whoever gets stuck with the burden of proof is almost certain to lose, regardless of innocence or guilt, intentional or happenstance.

Fourth, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] stated on this floor that the remedial and backpay remedies of title VII have served us well for 25 years. Yet this bill guts the traditional remedial backpay and equitable relief remedies of title VII, changing it into a multimillion dollar new tort remedy, a bonanza for attorneys, an employers' intimidation bill.

This new tort remedy also applies to title I of the newly passed Americans With Disabilities Act. News: Juries will thus weight henceforth whether discrimination on the basis of one's physical and/or mental disabilities was intentional or not. Was there really undue hardship justifying a refusal? Oh boy, the juries will take over in that too.

Perhaps the saddest aspect of this bill is that its many proponents see racial discrimination as a political issue, a matter of power and pressure by the elite, yes, by the elite, by entitlements and by law.

Let me refer in closing to a statement by Dr. Jeremy Rabkin from Princeton University, who waited a full day to testify, and finally was the last witness when there was nobody there to listen to him. And he said this:

> This legislation sends terrible signals to the people most directly concerned with public policy in this area. To the established civil rights groups that have championed this legislation it says "More of the same is appropriate and acceptable, even though it has plainly failed in central ways." To politicians it says it is enough to please the civil rights groups; you don't have to worry about whether you are really dealing with real problems.

And then he says,

> Let me be blunt. This approach is not merely a disappointment. It is a scandal. The sponsors of this legislation are not even proposing to throw money at the problems in the well-meaning, if naive fashion of great society programs. Instead, they propose to throw money at lawyers who may be hanging around the remotest periphery of the problems or at lawyers who are simply hanging around. A generation of inner-city youth is drowning in drugs and violence and despair and opting out, opting out of the job programs altogether. And does Congress really have no better idea than encouraging new lawsuits to intimidate employers?

I urge a vote against the conference report.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. As you know, Mr. Speaker, just a little more than a quarter century ago Congress passed the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which outlawed discrimination in employment, public accommodations and federally funded programs. For the past 25 years, America has made great strides toward wiping out discrimination. Today we must continue to move forward, not backward, in the march against prejudice, and that is why we are here today.

Last year, America's progress toward the goals of equal opportunity for all was threatened by a Supreme Court extremely out of step with our society. Because of the Court's misguided decisions, millions of Americans can no longer count on the protection of this Nation's civil rights laws. That is, not until today.

Mr. Speaker and to my colleagues, I strongly encourage the passage of this conference report because it is our duty to repair the Supreme Court's damage to our civil rights laws. This legislation that will be sent on to the President restores and strengthens the protections of the civil rights of every American, and moreover it sends a clear message that there will not be any reversal on our national commitment to equal justice for all.

I also ask my colleagues here today that as you consider your vote, that you remember that our job here is not to legislate based upon a looming veto threat, but to legislate based upon the needs of this country.

In closing, I take this time to commend my chairman, GUS HAWKINS, for his unwavering efforts to improve the quality of life for all Americans and in particular for his struggles to pass the Civil Right Act of 1990. He is to be highly commended.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, harkening back to the debate on the rule, I agree with everything the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] said about discrimination. I agree with everything except his conclusion.

The trouble with this bill is it uses invidious discrimination to rectify, to remedy invidious discrimination. If you do not belong to the statistically favored group, if you are the wrong race, the wrong ethnicity, if you are the wrong gender, you are left out. You do not get the job. You are the new victim of invidious discrimination.

The ideal of America has always been a color-blind society. That was the core of the civil rights bill of 1964, but we are moving farther and farther and farther away from that.

The world is balkanized. The world is tribalized. I guess we are getting that way here, too. But the ideal, the ideal we should still hope for and work toward, is equality.

Someone once said, "When he speaks of honesty, I count the spoons." When you label something civil rights, right away you have the battle half won, but beware of false labeling.

We used to use "defense" in wartime. Everything was the "defense education bill," and so on which made it popular. Now it is civil rights. So you had better support this bill or you are against civil rights. Not so.

This is a quota bill. It says it is not a quota bill, but the consequences, and they are not unintended, are quotas.

Quotas must be invidious, because you say it is not a quota bill. We all agree that quotas are not a good idea, so the question is not what the label reads, it is what is in the bottle.

The fact is the surest way for an employer to avoid a costly lawsuit that he or she cannot win plus huge liability and attorneys' fees and costs is to hire and promote by quotas. That is the reality as sure as Newton's three laws of motion.

If you are going to stick somebody with big damages, and we will talk about that in a minute, the easiest thing to do, the smartest thing to do, his accountant will tell him, is to hire by the numbers so you get the job not if you are the best-qualified, not if you have been around long enough; you get the promotion if you have the right color of skin or your last name is Hispanic or you are the proper gender. That is not the ideal of America.

I do not mean we have reached it, but that is not something that ought to be labeled as civil rights. It is civil wrong.

The damage provision is terrorizing. You have an illusory cap on the punitive damages. It provides unlimited compensatory damages plus a cap of $150,000 on punitive, or the sum of the compensatory damages and back pay, whichever is greater. The sky is the limit. It warms the cockles of the heart of a personal-injury lawyer, because that is where the money is.

There are many other reasons. The definition of business necessity; "manifest relation to the job in question" is the Griggs formula. You say you are readopting Griggs, but you move to something else, a "significant relation to successful performance of the job."

We set up hurdles that no one can overleap. We threaten employers with horrendous damages if they do not hire by the numbers. We put the burden of proof not on he who alleges, but he who must defend.

This is not a civil rights bill, this is a dangerous quota bill. That is why it will be vetoed, not because any person is for discrimination, but because they are for a bill that is workable and not results oriented, but opportunities oriented.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think this is one of the more disappointing and tragic days in the Congress of the United States because civil rights law ought to be bipartisan. Civil rights ought to be something that is signed into law, and because that process has failed, we are forced to go through this action this afternoon that will bear no positive result.

I need to start by saying very clearly that those who suggest that the President has not made any compromise on the civil rights debate are absolutely wrong. There was before this House, there was before the other body, legislation the President said he would sign. It modified Wards Cove. It modified the remedy section. It modified the Price Waterhouse case. It modified the Martin versus Wilkes. It modified Patterson, and it modified Lorenz. That is six major changes of present civil rights law that the President of the United States said he would accept and sign into law.

Yet here we stand, so close to bipartisan civil rights legislation that could be signed into law, and yet so far away. Why are we far away? We are far away because if we look at the conference report that is in front of Members, and we go to page 15 of that conference report, it says:

> If compensatory or punitive damages are sought with respect to a claim of intentional discrimination arising under this title, any party may demand a trail by jury.

That is one of the two basic problems the President and I and others have with this legislation, because we are changing the whole premise that civil rights law would be resolved through reconciliation. Now it will be jury trails, litigation, and damages to see how much we can make. If that does not go far enough, what we only need look at is on page 17 of the conference report where it says, and get this:

> No stipulation of dismissal of a claim shall be effective until the parties attest to the courts that a waiver of all or substantially all attorney's fees was not compelled.

This is not civil rights law, and we all know it. It is nothing but full employment for the Trail Lawyers Association. That is why they have been involved in this process. That is why they are politically supporting the people that are bringing this to the floor of the House, and we ought to be embarrassed to do this in the name of the victims of discrimination in this country.

Finally, take a good look at this act because it gets at the points we were discussing during the rule. I will only read to Members line 16, if there is disparate impact in an employment practice, under this bill, if a complaining party demonstrates that a group of practices results in a disparate impact, such party shall not be required to demonstrate which specific practice or practices results in that impact.

That, my friends, is the problem. We are on the defensive, and we have not even the knowledge of what is the reason for the discrimination suit filed against them.

Last year, 40,000 people filed discrimination suits with the EEOC. Some 7,500 were involved in court cases. For those 46,000 people, and for all future victims of discrimination, we can and we must do better than that.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] for his leadership. He has been, indeed, one of the most steadfast and strongest supporters of the Civil Rights Act of all Americans in our Congress. We will miss him when he leaves.

I rise, Mr. Speaker, in very strong support of the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. This legislation will, as we said when it was discussed during House consideration earlier this year, return the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to the foundation of equality and justice that it was designed to be. I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman who spoke before me, and I worked with him on a very significant civil rights bill that passed this Congress, the Americans with Disabilities Act. He and I both listened quite frankly to person after person who projected the incredible adverse consequences of passing that legislation. I suggest that some are doing that with this legislation, and I would suggest, equally incorrectly.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 is a milestone in the history of civil rights in this country, just as the Americans with Disabilities Act was earlier this year. It overturns a number of Supreme Court cases which my colleague has just mentioned. The conference report before Members is the result of long negotiations and significant compromise by those committed in this country, who have fought through the decades to ensure the civil rights of citizens of this country. I would hope that when we pass this, as we surely will, that the President would see fit to sign this very, very important act.

It states that it may not be interpreted, I might add, to encourage or require quotas no matter how often that is said in the legislative history, no matter how clearly it is stated in the bill, there continues to be the claim that it creates quotas because it will create defensive actions. Defensive actions perhaps, are necessary because there have been in this country, unfortunately, a history of discriminatory practices that this Congress in 1964 said were not the policy and were not legal in this country, and which we reiterate today in this bill.

If President Bush vetoes this bill, it will be a veto of division, I suggest to Members. It will be a veto of polarization. It will be a veto that says to those who are discriminated in our society, that they are not going to be protected to the extent they should. We ought to pass this today with no less than 290 votes. I urge my colleagues to overwhelmingly support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Conference Report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I want to commend the conferees for their efforts.

This legislation will, as we said when it was discussed during House consideration earlier this year, return the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to the foundation of equality and justice that it was designed to be.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 is a milestone in the history of civil rights in this country—just as the Americans With Disabilities Act was earlier this year. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 overturns a number of Supreme Court decisions which did permanent and grievous harm to the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964, one of the most progressive and just acts this body has come up with in its entire 202-year history.

The conference report before us today is the result of long negotiations and willingness to reach a fair compromise on the part of the civil rights community. There is no reason for President George Bush not to sign this conference report. The bill now expressly states that it may not be interpreted to encourage or require quotas. It also requires all plaintiffs to prove the specific employment practice which is responsible for disparate impact. Compensatory and punitive damages are eliminated in mixed motive claims. The conference report addresses several concerns that had been raised regarding consent decrees, including allowing more individuals to challenge consent decrees.

If President George Bush vetoes this bill, it will be a veto of division, it will be a veto of polarization, it will be veto which says to those who are discriminated in our society that they are of less worth. It will be an unacceptable veto.

Two and a half decades ago, our Nation examined its soul in a time of turmoil and controversy. Yet it was also a time of hope. It was during this time that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was enacted by the Congress. We must now return to that spirit and ensure that the historic work of that Congress is not destroyed.

The view of America around the world has been dominated many times by our record on civil rights and equal treatment for all. In fact, many news reports indicated that the decision of the International Olympic Committee to locate the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta was heavily influenced by that city's progressive record on civil rights.

Today, let us renew that vision of America. I strongly urge my colleagues to pass this legislation by a large and resounding margin, to say again to the world, discrimination is not acceptable in America.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the conference agreement on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I stand before you not as an opponent of civil rights and equal employment opportunities for all people, but rather an opponent of unfair, costly and burdensome laws placed on citizens who provide the jobs for all Americans, laws which often ultimately impact negatively on those they are intended to help. I do not believe that the goals of the civil rights community and the business community must necessarily compete and conflict with each other.

In the last few months and today, there has been a lot of debate about what exactly is required by this bill. Both sides cite legal opinions and specific language that shows what they believe this law will require. I am not a lawyer, and will leave that debate to the lawyers. However, I would like to illuminate a perspective that we forget too often here in Congress: The laws we pass have real effects on the lives of real people outside the beltway often exactly opposite to the intention of those who have passed the law.

The small business owner cannot afford the risk of additional litigation Kennedy-Hawkins places on him or her and remain competitive. He or she cannot rely on the opinion of a lawyer in Washington that the language in Kennedy-Hawkins does not require quotas. He or she cannot depend on a phrase in bill that says quotas are not required or encouraged. He or she must be confident that the business will not be subject to a lawsuit. He or she will need to review the hiring practices used and decide if he or she is completely confident that he or she can justify every hiring practice, including subjective tests, and that he can convince a jury that those decisions were justified. Even if the job provider is confident of the fairness of the hiring practices, I believe that most job providers will decide that they cannot afford the risk of a lawsuit, and will adopt quotas or close in cousin to avoid this risk.

There has been much discussion of the changes made in Kennedy-Hawkins since it was introduced. However, these changes merely nibble at the edges of the serious weaknesses in this bill. It still allows juries to award punitive and compensatory damages. There still is no cap on damages for pain and suffering. On the issue of quotas, the changes at best reduced the probability that this bill will lead to quotas from an absolute certainty to a virtual certainty.

Last August 3, the peoples' House had an opportunity to vote on a compromise that did address the concerns about Kennedy-Hawkins. The chairman of the Small Business Committee offered legislation which protected the rights of individuals seeking employment, while allowing the job providers community to operate without congressionally imposed quotas. Unfortunately, the LaFalce-Goodling substitute failed. I do not believe the substitute bill failed because of its merit or substance.

Today we have another chance to improve civil rights legislation by voting against this conference report. We can go back to the drawing board next year to draft legislation to correct the Supreme Court's decisions which have negatively affected civil rights law. I know that a compromise can be reached which protects the rights of all citizens, black or white, woman or man, employee or employer.

Again, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting "no" on this conference agreement.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY], the majority whip.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, here we go again. The administration claims that this bill is a quota bill, but what a smoke screen that is.

This bill rejects quotas. Let me quote from page 29, section 13 of the conference report:

Nothing in the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to require or encourage an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin:

That is the law, and so to say that this is a quota bill is absolutely wrong.

The fact is we know what the White House wants. We know from the memo that John Sununu sent us last week proposing the alternative that the administration wanted. He had the nerve to say that this bill would interfere with customer relationships. You remember what customer relationships are. Let me remind you. It is what Lester Mattox offered as his reason for standing in front of his restaurant with an axe handle to deny blacks access to his restaurant. It is what universities and country clubs use as their reason why they could not admit people whose names were Cohen, Levy, or Goldberg. It is what corporations said when they hired women only to do typing and why law firms told many women graduates of law schools that they should get married and forget a legal career.

Why? Customer relations. "Our clients couldn't deal with a woman lawyer."

It is what Asian Americans face when their children do so well on college admission exams, but they still cannot get into the college or the university of their choice. They call it customer preference, but we know what it is. It is bigotry. It is sexism. It is racism. It is discrimination.

Arthur Fletcher, the Chairman of the Civil Rights Commission, appointed by President Bush, said about the White House position:

An absolute outrage. It would take us back to the 1940's. I cannot believe anyone sincere about civil rights would have proposed such language.

Well, Arthur, I am here to tell you that they did.

Recently a Republican candidate for the Senate in Louisiana took off his robe, got a face lift and got a new hairdo, but inside he was the same, and all of us knew it, including many Republicans. He got a lot of votes.

David Duke was no fluke. He played the Willie Horton strategy. He played the southern strategy. He played divide and conquer politics.

Mr. Speaker and my friends, if you are for civil rights, vote for this bill. If you want to play politics and have code language that divides this country and plays on the fears of people, then vote against it; but if you want a civil rights bill that moves us forward in the bipartisan tradition of the past, I urge you to vote for this bill.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, for starters, I know it is always tempting to play politics in a bill that is entitled Civil Rights, but I do want to set the record straight for my good friend, the majority whip. In fact, David Duke of Louisiana was a Democrat and was running for the U.S. Senate as an independent, and the Republican Party and the Republican leaders and a large number of Republican officials, in fact most, if not all in Louisiana, opposed David Duke, who the gentleman referred to.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, Duke holds office as a Republican. He is a Republican State representative.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, to correct the record as far as politics, not on this bill, David Duke was a Democrat and ran as an Independent with the organized opposition of the Republican Party.

The question on the so-called civil rights bill before us, the question is how do you sell a junk car that does not run? One way, although not very straightforward, is to slap a thin coat of paint on the car and call it fixed and hope that no one looks at the engine, but the car still does not run. It is a little bit slicker. It is a little bit shinier, but it still does not run, and that is what has happened here with this legislation. There is no change in reality in the conference report from the legislation previously sent to conference. The changes are only a thin coat of paint. They are only cosmetic. The bill still is not a civil rights bill. It is an attorneys' fee bill. It is a litigation bill. It is a quota bill.

Let us examine the specifics of this legislation in its present form. First we heard the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON] refer to section 9 of the bill which was not changed. Section 9 says that all other parties can settle their fees, but the attorneys cannot be required to settle their fees in a court. Read section 9, not changed in the conference committee report.

No consent order or judgment settling a claim under this title shall be entered, unless the parties or their counsel attest to the court that a waiver of attorneys' fees was not compelled as a condition of the settlement.

Second, this left the House as a quota bill. It is still a quota bill.

If the proponents of this legislation had wanted to eliminate quotas out of this bill, they could have restored the Griggs decision of 1971. The Griggs definition of business necessity was a one-part definition. It said that business necessity is manifestly related to the employment in question, but this bill does not do that. This bill sets up a two-part definition, and one of the parts of the definition requires a significant relationship to the successful performance of the job. Never been heard from in civil rights law before. Never been heard from in any court cases before. It was made up in order to require quotas, regardless of the other language of the bill.

The bill goes on. In other places it was not correct, requiring demonstrable evidence, presumably that eliminates the subjective evidence of interviews, job recommendations and performance appraisals.

Plaintiffs under this bill are still permitted to demonstrate a group of practices rather than naming the individual practice that resulted in the disparate impact.

It left the House floor a quarter bill, came back as a quarter bill; left the House floor as an attorney's fee bill, came back as an attorney's fee bill, and most egregious, left the House floor as a damages bill, turning 25 years of civil rights laws and practices on their heads, 25 years of civil rights set out as a basic of civil rights enforcement to provide for corrective action, make-whole remedies to stop the discrimination.

This bill provides for the first time in civil rights law punitive damages, compensatory damages and litigation.

Oh, the bill purports to place a cap, but there is no cap. It is compensatory damages plus an equal amount in punitive damages.

I will enter into the RECORD today a list of court cases listing those compensatory damages.

No compromise, the changes are only cosmetic. Vote against the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). The Chair will advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has 1½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BROOKS] has 1 minute remaining. The gentleman from Texas will close the debate.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a very difficult morning for me as has this whole session dealing with civil rights legislation. I have spent my entire adult life trying to make sure that all had an equal opportunity for a good education and an equal opportunity for a good life in this great country. I owe that to society because I was more fortunate than many. Not because I do not know what poverty is; I was one of 6 children during the Depression. Not because I do not know what discrimination is; I had a horrible year my first year in 9th grade going to the city schools. Minorities as well as majorities attacking us because we were country kids; but I had the love at home to see me through the night and get me back to school the next day. By the time that the end of the year came, I was able to win over those who were so vicious early on.

But I cannot vote for legislation that I believe and I truly believe will set back the civil rights efforts in this country rather than enhance it. And that is what I believe the legislation will do.

I hope that after the veto, even this session we can make a few changes and then have a true civil rights bill.

I want to thank the staff who have worked day and night for a long, long time, sitting behind me for their efforts to try to bring forth good civil rights legislation.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank my chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure if I had stood in this Chamber in 1964, I would have heard the very same type of debate we have heard today regard the original civil rights bill—Very good-natured and very much based on good faith. But I think, in some cases, very wrong.

If you examine this bill from every conceivable angle, persons can find reasons to vote against it. But when you examine its philosophy, its overall direction, it has to be supported.

I certainly rise in behalf of the Civil Rights Act amendments of 1990, salute all of the sponsors of it. It is not a quota bill. There is a limit on damages. There is no reason not to support this bill.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I would just say that this is a good confernce report. The Members ought to support it. It is a fair, objective step forward for this Nation. I think we should continue to make progress and not turn the clock back.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Members to support this conference report.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, the United States was founded on the principle of equal opportunity for all citizens. No American should be denied a job or the opportunity to succeed based on their race, sex, national origin, or religion. These principles, which until last year had been reaffirmed repeatedly by the Supreme Court, are the strength of our Nation.

The conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 simply ensures these principles stay intact. This measure restores to women and minorities the guarantee that their rights on the job are protected. It also guarantees the right of workers who are the victims of intentional discrimination to sue for damages.

The argument that this legislation would result in a torrent of lawsuits is unfounded. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 merely reinstates the civil rights protections that were in place prior to 1989. During these years, an undue number of discrimination cases was not brought before the courts.

The entire Nation suffers from the burden of intentional discrimination. If the American work force is to be truly productive, workers must be guaranteed a work place free of harassment and discrimination. This is the least assurance that women and minorities in the work place should have.

I do not accept the President's arguments that this bill will lead employers to set hiring quotas. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 is not about requiring hiring quotas. It is about fairness in employment and opportunity and about providing a level playing field for all workers.

Voting for the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 will reinstate the protections minorities and women need to participate equally and productively in the nation's work place. Congress should pass this conference report and the President should sign this important measure into law. We owe this protection to the women and minorities living and working in the United States:

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support for the conference on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. By passing this conference today, we will renew the commitment of Congress to the employment protections adopted in title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we will reaffirm the original intent of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

I am especially supportive of the Civil Rights Act because of its provisions to guarantee protection in cases of sex discrimination. We must always remember, sex discrimination knows no boundaries. It crosses racial distinctions. White women are not immuned. Black women are not spared. Asian women know it well. Put simply, women deserve the same protection from sexism, as they do from racism.

In recent years, we have seen the protections guaranteed in the original Civil Rights Act erode before our very eyes. Basic battles for social justice we thought we won years ago, have been weakened and, in some cases, even reversed.

Today we have the opportunity to set America back on a course of respect and protection of basic civil rights for all of its citizens. Today we must pass the conference on the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

I urge all Members to support this conference report.

Mr. SCHEUER. I rise today to voice my support for the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. This bill restores civil rights guarantees for employees, ensuring that all who are qualified for a job are treated fairly, regardless of their race, sex or their religion.

It has been more that 2 years since the Supreme Court handed down the Grover City decision stating that Federal civil rights laws apply only to a specific program and not to an entire organization, regardless of the prevalence of intentional discrimination throughout that organization. The Grove City case marked the beginning of a string of Court opinions that curtailed well established civil rights remedies and misinterpreted the spirit of the original Civil Rights Act.

This string of opinions resulted in cases such as the Wards Cove case where the Court went so far as to shift the burden of proof on the question of a business necessity from the employer to the worker, although the worker has no access to company forms or records and no way to prove that a decision was made with bias or discriminatory intent.

Today, we are called upon to restore our civil rights laws to their original intent. This legislation restores equity to our present system and makes qualifications for a position the only test for hiring, firing, and promoting decisions. If a business necessity exists so that only certain types of individuals are qualified for a position, then the employer need only justify this disperate treatment by showing such a business necessity and demonstrating that the motivation in fact was not a discriminatory one.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 guarantees that an entire institution remain free from biased decisionmaking. The act, however, only penalizes those employers who are guilty of intentional discrimination or bias. It allows compensatory and punitive damages for proven intentional discrimination, but punitive damages are not allowed in cases where mixed motives are involved. This limit on punitive damages ensures that this law will not become a quota bill. Moreover, the act itself specifies in clear language that it not only does not require quotas but that it also does not encourage the use of quotas for minorities.

Instead of creating a quota system, our legislation today establishes that a level playing field should exist within our country's business. The legislation makes it clear that equal rights under the law must be provided to all, to women, to seniors, to religious, racial and ethnic minorities. It is a law which furthers the fundamental principles of equality and justice.

Congress now has the opportunity to alleviate the damage done by the Supreme Court's incorrect interpretations of our civil rights laws and to rectify the mass dismissal of hundreds of cases involving discrimination. This act attempts to guarantee that a nondiscrimination ethic functions as our Nation's work ethic. I urge my colleagues to adopt this legislation and reinstate our country's determination to erase all forms of bigotry and provide equal employment opportunity to all those who have been denied it.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, in late July of this year, I introduced a substitute for the then drafted H.R. 4000, the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I believed it was necessary to reverse a number of unfortunate Supreme Court cases, but I also believed that H.R. 4000, as then drafted, was grieviously flawed. It directly abridges the rights of the men and women who operate our Nation's small businesses and employ most of our work force by tilting the scales of justice against them whenever there was an allegation of discrimination, no matter how unfounded that allegation might be.

On August 3, 1990, my amendment was offered as a substitute to H.R. 4000, in order to place the scales of justice in equilibrium between accusers and accused, between employees and employers.

Although my amendment was defeated, I voted for final passage of H.R. 4000 in the hope that the conferees might, at some point, see the disdom of some of my arguments. I am very happy to say that because of the concerns my amendment addressed, the Civil Rights Act has now been, at least in certain respects, significantly and substantially modified in the direction which I proposed.

On August 3, in order to prevent my amendment from passing, the proponents of H.R. 4000 had to modify the bill in three very important ways.

First, in order to allay the legitimate fear of quotas in disparate impact cases, language, taken from my amendment, was aded to state explicitly that "The mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's workforce on account of race, color, religion, sex or national origin is not alone sufficient to establish a prima facie case of a disparate impact violation." Also, language was added to explicitly state that "nothing in the amendments made by this act shall be construed to require an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."

Second, in international discrimination cases, H.R. 4000 was changed to cap punitive damages at $150,000 for employers of 100 employees or less. Although—and this is not only troubling, but possibly unconstitutional—if higher compensatory damages—pain and suffering—were awarded, the punitive damages could equal the compensatory damages.

Third, the bill was changed so that it would not overturn Supreme Court cases retroactively.

Later, the first conference agreement between the House and Senate extended the punitive damages cap to all employers, although the compensatory-punitive damages exception was still retained.

On October 11, 1990, I took to the House floor to urge that the first conference report be recommitted to the conference committee so that further changes could be made in the direction of my original amendment. The House voted to do just that.

After recommittal of the first conference report, the conference agreed to make the following important changes in the conference report:

First, the bill was amended to bar damages in "mixed motive" cases—involving employment practices motivated by both discriminatory and nondiscriminatory criteria—if the same action would have been taken "in the absence of any discrimination." My concern with the original bill was that an employer could be found guilty of discrimination and made to pay unlimited damages even though it was clearly shown that the employee or job applicant was totally unqualified for the job, salary increase or promotion. That provision was unbelievable. The language before us would now bar recovery of damages in those cases in which the individual was clearly not qualified.

Second, as I had proposed, the "burden of proof" section of the disparate impact provision was amended to require that, before the burden of proof could shift to an employer, the complainant had to show both, first, a disparate impact, and second, a casual connection between the disparate impact and the specific employment practice or practices of the employer.

Prior to this conference agreement, the bill had deliberately avoided the use of the word "cause"—using the word "result" instead—thus inferring that an employer could be punished absent a casual nexus between the employment practice or practices and the disparate impact. This rather radical departure from traditional legal principles has now been avoided.

Further, prior to this conference, complainants did not have to identify the specific employment practice or practices which result in the disparate impact. Now, as was proposed in my amendment, such specificity is required.

Finally, prior to this conference, there was no clarification as to the admissibility of performance evaluations, written records, and the testimony of individuals with knowledge of the practice in determining whether an employment practice meets the test of business necessity. Indeed, most believe such evidence would have been inadmissible. This second conference report now formally recognizes their admissibility.

Third, as I had also proposed, the conference modified the bill's definition of business necessity. It does not, as I had proposed, go fully back to the original language in the holding of Griggs versus Duke Power and its progeny, language which never resulted in quotas during the 18 years it was the law of the land. But, at least, with respect to nonselection further amended to clarify that the bill does not even intend to encourage quotas.

Fifth, the bill was also amended to more clearly specify, as my amendment did, who may, and under what circumstances they may, challenge already existing consent decrees. Constitutional protections require that a person cannot be deprived of his legal rights in a proceeding to which he is not a party. Crucial to this requirement is the fundamental notion that people should not be barred from bringing a future legal action if they should have received notice of the earlier action and did not. The conference report, as did my amendment, strengthens and clarifies the notice requirements.

Sixth, the bill, as did my amendment, deletes a provision whereby defendants would have had to automatically pay complainants attorneys' fees if the defendant had earlier rejected a settlement offer which was as good or better than the final outcome. The bill, like my amendment, now returns the assessment of attorneys' fees to the discretion of the court.

Seventh, a new provision is added stating that it is not the bill's intent to overrule current case law on comparable worth.

In summary, I believe that the current version of the Civil Rights Act meets a number of the objections addressed by my amendment. These do not represent significant concessions; they represent common sense and fairness. Indeed, it is shocking that the need for these changes was not recognized earlier and even more amazing to think that this law could have been enacted without these changes.

I still wish the conferees would have considered other provisions of my substitute which address a number of other significant problems with the bill. However, despite that, I believe that the bill has now been sufficiently improved, and that the second conference report should now be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 273, nays 154, not voting 6, as follows:

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, last week the House passed H.R. 5759, a bill making minor technical corrections to the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act, S. 1511. The Senate has now sent H.R. 5759 back to us with a clarifying amendment. We accept the amendment.

H.R. 5759, with the clarifying amendment made by the Senate, is directed exclusively at the circumstances under which an employer may offset severance pay with health insurance benefits under section 4(l)(2)(A)(1) of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act—as added by S. 1511. Thus, the amendments made to S. 1511 by H.R. 5759, as amended by the Senate, are merely technical. They are not intended to and do not limit in any way the current protection under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5759 as amended by the Senate. This bill is a companion to H.R. 3200, S. 1511, the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act, which was passed by both bodies several weeks ago and signed by the President just last night.

H.R. 5759 is designed solely to address the technical issue of what benefits, particularly retiree health benefits and pension sweeteners, may be offset against an employee's severance payment under section 4(l)(2) of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. It is the final piece in the legislative puzzle that will overrule the Betts case and allow us to protect older workers from discrimination on the basis of age in the provision of employee benefits. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and provide both employees and employers with clear guidelines on complying with the requirements of the ADEA in the area of employee benefits.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to associate myself with the remarks of my distinguished colleague Mr. GOODLING.

This technical corrections bill, H.R. 5759, was previously passed by the House under suspension of the rules to clarify some drafting problems in the underlying legislation, S. 1511, the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act.

Senators HATCH and METZENBAUM agreed, with the concurrence of Mr. GOODLING, Chairman HAWKINS, Mr. CLAY, and myself, to amend H.R. 5759 so that there would be no question but that retiree health benefits providing coverage for retirees could be offset from severance benefits. In addition, we also agreed that such deduction does not affect the meaning of any other provisions of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act.

I am pleased that with the passage of H.R. 5759 as amended, we have achieved the important goal of bringing employee benefits into the realm of protection against age discrimination.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks, and include therein extraneous material, on H.R. 5759.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 3095, SAFE MEDICAL DEVICES ACT OF 1990

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3095) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to make improvements in the regulation of medical devices, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have no information about this bill on this side of the aisle. We are in the process of making a phone call to try to find out about it. I would appreciate it if the gentleman would withhold his request until we can figure out where we are.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to get an opportunity to go to conference with the safe medical devices bill. This is a bill that has been worked out on both sides of the aisle. This has been cleared with the minority.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I have every reason to believe that the gentleman is correct, but we simply do not have any information at this point from our side.

Mr. Speaker, I am now told we have made the call and we have it.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees and without objection, reserves the right to appoint additional conferees: Messrs. DINGELL, WAXMAN, WYDEN, LENT, and MADIGAN.

There was no objection.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1991

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 487 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5422.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI] to assume the chair temporily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5422) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, with Mr. KANJORSKI, Chairman pro tempore in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5422, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991.

H.R. 5422 authorizes funds for all intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government for fiscal year 1991. These funds are allocated between the National Foreign Intelligence Program, which consists of those U.S. intelligence programs which provide information to the President and other national decisionmakers, and the tactical intelligence and related activities programs which supply intelligence to military commanders.

The bill is the product of more than 70 hours of hearings by the Budget Subcommittee and the Subcommittee on Legislation. It enjoys the bipartisan support of the Intelligence Committee's 19 members, which is a testament to the constructive and cooperative spirit which the members brought to their work.

I want to thank in particular the committee's ranking Republican member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], for his invaluable counsel and assistance. The work of the committee reflects his many contributions and was greatly facilitated by his efforts. I also want to commend the committee staff for the dedicated and professional manner with which they assist all members in carrying out the committee's business.

On behalf of the Intelligence Committee, I also want to extend my appreciation to the members and staff of the Armed Services Committee for their assistance in our work. Because elements of the Department of Defense conduct the majority of U.S. intelligence activities, and for reasons of security, the intelligence budget is contained within the defense budget. The committee has worked closely, as it does each year, with the Committee on Armed Services to produce a package of recommendations which treats the programs over which there is shared jurisdiction in as consistent a manner as possible.

While the actual amounts authorized are contained in a classified schedule of authorizations incorporated by reference into H.R. 5422 and explained in a classified annex to the committee's report, those documents are available for the examination of members in the committee's offices. I urge Members who have not already done so to review this material.

The powerful political and social forces which have rocked the world in the past year will have a profound effect on the way in which our intelligence agencies pursue their mission. The focus of our intelligence efforts is changing as threats such as narcotics, international terrorism, and the spread of chemical and biological weapons vie with traditional adversaries like the Soviet Union and its allies in Eastern Europe for attention and resources. Redeployment of assets to meet new threats, while continuing to address the remaining security concerns posed by the old, will require careful planning, flexibility, and resourcefulness.

As the intelligence agencies enter this period of transition, they must contend with the same fiscal constraints which beset other elements of the Federal budget. The growth which characterized the intelligence budgets of the 1980's is over, and the challenges presented by new intelligence priorities will have to be reconciled with the reality of reduced resources.

This bill begins that process. The sum of the committee's recommendations is not only below the President's budget request, but below the amount authorized in fiscal year 1990 as well.

While the committee believes that H.R. 5422 assured adequate funding for all essential intelligence programs and activities, a high degree of cooperation between the agencies and the Congress will be critical if the lean budget years likely in the future are not to impair the ability of the United States to meet its intelligence needs.

The recent changes in the world should produce a reexamination of more than just intelligence budget numbers. The means by which to achieve those foreign policy objectives supported by intelligence programs must also be reviewed. It will be asserted in debate today that U.S. foreign policy goals should not be pursued by secret means, and that important policy decisions should be publicly debated, and openly implemented. That is an argument with which I find myself in substantial agreement.

We will also hear that there are times when, for a variety of operational reasons, U.S. assistance programs cannot be undertaken or sustained if they are publicly acknowledged. As much as I might wish it were otherwise, I believe that there is validity to that argument as well.

A degree of tension therefore exists between the desire of many in this House that policies be determined through open debate, and the likelihood that some policies can be most effectively promoted only through secret means. That tension increases the longer policies are pursued in secret, and it is exacerbated when the details of supposedly covert programs are regularly reported in the media. The result is that we spend far too much time debating whether a policy should be pursued in secret and far too little time considering whether it should be pursued at all.

The Intelligence Committee has tried for a year or more now, to do two sometimes consistent, sometimes conflicting things to resolve this issue.

First, we have attempted to encourage the administration to wind down or bring to an end, a small number of programs which originated some time ago under different conditions—during the height of the cold war. The circumstances under which they were originally undertaken have changed considerably; many of the arguments originally given in justification of pursuing them have themselves since changed because of those changing circumstances.

In the alternative, we have urged the administration, if it feels it necessary to continue any of these programs, to ask publicly for our—and for the American peoples'—support for them through public discussion and debate, and through an open vote in the Congress.

These are programs which are, in fact, quite well known to the public, and well covered and reported by the media. Everyone is free to discuss and debate them except for those of us who are members of the committees which must consider the policy the programs are designed to support, and authorize their funding. We are the only ones who cannot discuss them publicly. In my view, such programs should be debated publicly and voted on publicly. If they are policies worth pursuing, the Congress will support and authorize them and thereby strengthen the position of the administration; if they are not supported, it is likely that they are policies the Government should not be pursuing.

In sum, major component parts of U.S. foreign policy should not be secretly authorized and voted upon unless there are terribly compelling reasons for that procedure. I think it is obvious that there is in general less reason to pursue some of these policies secretly now, than there may well have been just a very few years ago.

Those are the feelings of a great many members of the Intelligence Committees of both Houses of the Congress, but I must also tell you that, most of us at least, have also been trying to help the administration in its effort to wind down some of these programs. Democrats as well as Republicans on the committee are persuaded that this administration seriously is searching for the best way to bring them to a close.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear that members of the Intelligence Committee are determined to promote a review of the general issue of the appropriateness in certain cases of the maintenance of secret means of furthering foreign policy. I again commend the classified documents accompanying H.R. 5422 to the Members' attention. These documents reflect the committee's intention to pursue this issue in the coming months with the administration. I am hopeful our efforts will lead to clear understandings about the limits on the effectiveness of secret means of policy implementation, and on an agreement as to how policies originally pursued in secret can be brought into the open in ways that will allow for a debate on their merits without ending their utility.

Before explaining in summary form the legislative provisions of H.R. 5422, I want to make some comments about the oversight title, title VII, of the Senate version of this legislation. I know that many Members have been contacted by constituents concerned that title VII will convey to the President broad new authorities in the area of covert action which will enable such actions to be conducted without fear of interference by the Congress.

I want to assure the Members that, in my judgment, nothing could be further from the truth. I can think of few legislative provisions which have been so badly misinterpreted as has title VII of the Senate intelligence authorization bill.

No new authority for the conduct of covert action is provided to the President by title VII. No congressional powers or prerogatives are transferred to the executive branch.

In fact, the existing system of congressional oversight of covert action programs is substantially strengthened by improvements that these title VII provisions would make in the procedures by which information about these programs is provided to Congress. More information would be available to Congress as a result of the enactment of title VII. The procedure for approval of covert actions by the President would be tightened, and oversight would be enhanced rather than weakened.

Why am I so certain? Because provisions essentially the same as those contained in title VII comprised a bill reported 2 years ago as a response to the Iran-Contra affair by the House Intelligence Committee. For reasons unconnected to those particular provisions, that bill never reached the House floor. It may be that some drafting improvements can be made in the Senate's language to make more clear what the bill does, and does not do, with respect to oversight of covert action. We will be discussing necessary changes in conference and I can assure Members that any provisions we agree to will result in strengthened oversight.

At this time, I would like to briefly describe the major legislative provisions of H.R. 5422.

Title III contains provisions developed in cooperation with the Post Office and Civil Service Committee which are intended to bring the CIA's retirement systems into conformance with the retirement systems in effect at other Federal agencies. I want to note in particular the following sections:

Section 304 which will enable a retiree who failed to elect a survivor benefit before retirement to make that election for a spouse married after retirement;

Section 305, which will reduce from 60 to 55 the age before which the remarriage of a former or surviving spouse shall terminate that person's entitlement to retirement or survivor benefits; and

Section 307, which will provide for a restoration to former spouses of the benefits they lose upon remarriage should the remarriage end in death, divorce, or annulment.

Title IV contains recurring provisions which, among other things, provide that authorizations in the bill are not to be construed as authorizing intelligence activities not otherwise authorized by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Title V contains provisions of particular relevance to the Department of Defense. I want to highlight the following sections:

Section 501, which will enable the Secretary of Defense to charge the CIA the same rate for airlift services that is charged to components of the Department of Defense;

Section 502, which was developed with the assistance of the Government Operations Committee, creates a limited exception to the Freedom of Information Act to permit the withholding from public disclosure of certain unclassified products of the Defense Mapping Agency. This exception would only apply when classification of the products is not feasible, but provision of them pursuant to a Freedom of Information Act request would reveal the sources and methods by which they were produced, or military operational or contingency planning;

Section 503, which will enable the Secretary of Defense, in coordination with the Director of Central Intelligence, to better protect the identity and mission of those DOD clandestine human intelligence collectors needing a commercial cover for their activities. Under current law, a DOD human intelligence collection operation may hold itself out to be a business, but may not engage in routine business activities such as establishing checking accounts, buying and selling products, or furnishing an office. This section will provide the authority for the conduct of those kinds of activities so that the necessary security for the cover operation is provided. The new authority may be used only to support intelligence collection activities conducted abroad, and the intelligence committees must be informed each time a commercial entity is established. In addition, the provision contains a 5-year sunset clause which is intended to ensure that the need for the authority, and its operation in practice, is reviewed.

As the official U.S. defense presence declines in many parts of the world, the execution of the defense intelligence mission may depend to a greater degree than in the past on the ability to gain access to a country through the use of a nonofficial cover. The committee was persuaded that a valid need existed for a reliable nonofficial cover alternative for the Defense Departments human intelligence collectors. The proposal presented by the Department was well developed and well coordinated within the intelligence community. The committee was persuaded that the limited use envisioned by the Department for the authorities provided will adequately address current shortcomings in nonofficial cover arrangements.

Finally, I want to mention section 504 which contains the text of an amendment adopted by the Armed Services Committee during its sequential referral of the bill. The provision requires the Secretary of Defense to provide any Member of Congress with access to a certain classified report concerning the operation of the Defense Department's POW/MIA office.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 5422 is a well-balanced response to the needs of our intelligence agencies, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to commend him for his leadership as chairman of this committee. As a person who has served with him for 6 years on this committee, I am delighted with the sort of leadership that, as chairman, he has given, the good will that he has promoted, and the good sense, in my view, and I would like to associate in general with his assessment of the report.

This is a subject which by its very nature involves many controversial areas and policy decisions. We could not possibly come to a conclusion with respect to a report which would satisfy everyone. The fact is that we are in a new age, the post-cold-war age, in which some of the assumptions are being challenged openly through the amendatory process. This is something we accept.

In any event, I do want to express my appreciation to the chairman.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his kind comments.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman and the committee on their fine record and especially for the gentleman's desire to wind down or bring to an end certain covert programs.

There is an urgent need for Congress to have more information than it does on the long-term military threat that we face in the world today, either regional threats or whatever in this postcold war world, in order for us to wind down or bring to an end many of the very comprehensive military programs that we wonder whether they are relevant to the world that we live in. Is the B-2 bomber relevant to a current threat that we face? Is star wars relevant? Is the mobile missile system relevant? Is there any likelihood that Congress is going to get a sophisticated long-term military threat appraisal from the collection of intelligence agencies under the jurisdiction of the gentleman's committee? Are we going to get it from the Defense Department? Are we going to get it from the National Security Agency in cooperation with the President?

Mr. BEILENSON. The answer to my friend, to the gentleman's question, is yes, without question, and I think in the relatively near future.

As the gentleman may know, such material has been requested already of the Defense Department and of the Secretary of Defense who has responded and is in the process of responding.

Both Mr. NUNN on the other side and the other House, the other body, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ASPIN], the distinguished chairman of our own Committee on Armed Services have requested such information. In fact, yes, that will be available to us, I would say to my friend, in the relatively near future.

Mr. SCHEUER. If the gentleman will yield further, will it be made available to all Members of this House?

Mr. BEILENSON. I am not sure I can answer the gentleman with respect to that particular question. It may well come in both classified and unclassified form. Quite obviously the relevant material would be available to all Members.

Mr. SCHEUER. As long as it is made available, even in classified form, as the gentleman mentioned, the information about these covert activities is available to us in classified form, that would be sufficient for our public-policy judgments as to whether these major weapons systems, new ones that we are being called upon to fund, are relevant to the military threat that we face in the world, and the world signified by Mikhail Gorbachev's receiving the Nobel Peace Prize yesterday.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I join my colleague in complimenting the chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence and the subcommittee chairs and other ranking members, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER], the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCHUGH], and the very splendid staff you have that has worked very closely with the staff of the Committee on the Judiciary and, in particular, the staff of my subcommittee that has jurisdiction over the FBI chiefly regarding the budget, laws affecting the FBI, and general day-to-day oversight of activities here in the United States that are not necessarily within the jurisdiction of the Intelligence Committee.

In the many years that I have been here, I have found that this is the best-run Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence in my experience, and it is really a great relief to all of us to understand that and to see the working of the committee and realize that the intelligence agencies are being subjected to daily strict scrutiny as is absolutely necessary.

There are some of us here who had the unpleasant experience of living through the 1970's where the intelligence agencies got out of control, and we had to establish select committees in the House and Senate to find out what was going on.

I assure the Members it was a great disappointment to all of us to find out what was going on back on those days.

The Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence here in the House and its sister committee in the Senate have really done a splendid job, and I compliment the gentleman. I compliment the gentleman and his committee on this good bill that is coming up.

The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], I believe, has an amendment later on that perhaps will not pass, but I want to commend it to my colleagues. It is a pretty darn good amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, profound changes have occurred in the world since the Intelligence Committee brought last year's intelligence authorization bill to the House floor. Many of these far-reaching developments were somewhat surprising, even by those closest to the situations involved. For example, some of the most astute German politicians were saying less than a year ago that the two Germanys were a long way from reunification. Yet, just a few weeks ago, in a breathtaking rush of popular will, Germany was officially reunified after 45 years of division.

Meanwhile, the experts on the Middle East were taken by surprise. Saddam Hussein's sabre-rattling threats suddenly gave way to the "blitzkreig" seizure of his small but resource-rich neighbor, Kuwait.

Some of these unforeseen changes have encouraged a degree of optimism, while the implications of others are profoundly sobering. Amidst all of this stunning turmoil, our committee has studied the intelligence budget and programs with great care. We have attempted to grasp the significance of these changes in the world situation vis-a-vis U.S. intelligence requirements and resources. Perhaps the most important conclusion the committee reached is that the world is still a terribly uncertain place, and consequently we must strive to maintain a strong and flexible national intelligence capability. Therefore, I would like to commend the whole committee for its cautious approach toward the budget cuts we have recommended in this intelligence authorization bill.

Moreover, in the course of our authorization hearings, our committee has endeavored to impress upon the intelligence community that it should continue to reevaluate carefully intelligence requirements and priorities in light of the changes in the international arena which are still unfolding.

I also wish to take this opportunity to thank Chairman BEILENSON for his exceptional leadership of the committee's work on this legislation. Under his stewardship, the process of developing this legislation has been characterized by comity and openness to the views and input of all Members, including the minority. In fact, a number of the important topics discussed in the committee's unclassified report reflect specific concerns of minority members.

One very important thrust of this bill is a strong and well-focused effort to reduce unnecessary redundancy among various intelligence programs. I believe our committee has been successful in accomplishing that task. This authorization bill will, in fact, result in more bang for the buck in the intelligence budget.

In short, Mr. Chairman, I am generally satisfied with this bill, as reported by the Intelligence Committee. I believe that the other members of the committee from this side of the aisle are as well. I would note, however, that counterintelligence remains a major concern of mine. In this regard, I believe that there is a need for better coordination among intelligence agencies responsible for sensitive classified programs and U.S. arms control negotiations. Improved coordination is essential if we are to minimize potentially serious counterintelligence problems in connection with on-site-inspection regimes which are likely to be included in arms control agreements. Nevertheless, I urge the House to pass H.R. 5422.

In conclusion, let me add a special word of appreciation for the dedicated efforts of our committee's very capable staff: Dan Childs, Tom Smeeton, Mike Sheehy, Bob Fitch, Diane Dornan, Cathy Eberwein, Louis Dupart, Joyce Pratt, Virginia Callis, Merritt Clark, Sharon Curcio, Calvin Humphrey, Dee Jackson, Jack Keliher, Ken Kodama, Jeannie McNally, Larry Prior, Bernie Raimo, Karen Schindler, Jeannie Seelbach, Bernie Toon, Angel Torres, and Steve Nelson. Without their loyal and diligent assistance, our legislative responsibilities would be virtually overwhelming.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCHUGH], chairman of our Subcommittee on Legislation.

Mr. MCHUGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this Intelligence Authorization Act and urge my colleagues to support it. I would like to commend our chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], our ranking Republican, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], and all the members of the committee for working together to forge a consensus on intelligence funding during this challenging time of transition brought about by the remarkable and welcome events that have occurred in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

The budget figures authorized by this bill, while less than last year, are significant. Given our interests in the world and our intelligence requirements, I think that these figures are reasonable. They represent a sensible accommodation of diverse pressures and interests during this unique transition year.

It is clear, however, that much of America's massive intelligence effort must be refocused to reflect both the new strategic environment and the urgency of our budget crisis. I believe that the intelligence requirements of the Nation in this decade and beyond can be met adequately with less money than is now being spent. Therefore, while supporting this year's authorization, I look forward next year to a leaner intelligence budget, a budget that realistically responds to changing conditions while continuing to protect the national security.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to authorizing spending levels for intelligence activities, this bill also contains several nonbudget legislative provisions considered by the Subcommittee on Legislation which I chair. I believe that they are reasonable provisions and can be briefly summarized as follows:

Sections 301 through 307 make several technical or conforming changes to the laws applicable to the CIA retirement system so as to more equitably treat surviving spouses and former spouses.

Section 502 authorizes the Secretary of Defense to withhold from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act certain maps and other geodetic products of the Defense Mapping Agency that are properly classifiable, but are not classified because to do so would limit their utility and availability and would unnecessarily increase costs for storage and handling.

Section 503 permits the Secretary of Defense to authorize certain intelligence elements of the Department of Defense to engage in commercial activities necessary to provide more secure cover for authorized intelligence collection activities conducted abroad. Our subcommittee agreed to this provision, which has been reviewed and refined during several years of consideration by the intelligence committees, only after concluding that the underlying intelligence collection activities are legitimate and necessary, that the new cover authority is needed to protect these activities from disclosure, and that the Department of Defense and the Defense Intelligence Agency are fully and irreversibly committed to careful implementation and rigorous oversight of the commercial activities to be conducted. I would also point out that section 503 contains a number of important safeguards which would:

Restrict the use of commercial cover to collection activities, ensuring that it cannot be used for covert action;

Require that the Director of Central Intelligence concur in the use of the commercial activities authorized;

Mandate strict internal financial controls, as well as full reporting to the intelligence committees of activities conducted pursuant to the cover authority, including prompt notice to the committees each time a corporation, partnership, or other legal entity is established; and

Terminate the authority in 5 years, a provision that would ensure a thorough review of this authority by the intelligence committees before it could be renewed.

With all of these oversight safeguards, I am confident that the Department of Defense will utilize the proposed authority prudently, paying close attention to the intelligence risks involved as well as to the potential for financial abuse.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there are two matters of particular interest to me that, while not treated in the bill before the House today, involve significant issues of intelligence oversight.

The first concerns provisions contained in the intelligence authorization bill passed by the Senate dealing with congressional oversight of intelligence activities in general and approval and reporting of covert actions in particular. These provisions, found in title VII of the Senate bill, are not contained in this House authorization. However, our committee's decision not to include them reflected a desire to pursue related issues with the administration, not a judgment that the Senate provisions are not acceptable. If, as is likely, the House conferees bring most of the provisions in title VII back in the conference agreement, I will, of course, discuss their content and background fully at that time. I would note now, however, that most of these provisions were endorsed by the Foreign Affairs and Intelligence Committees in 1988, and recommended by the Iran-Contra committees in their 1987 joint report. I mention this now only because I participated directly in the drafting of the 1988 provisions upon which title VII is based and because a recent lobbying effort seeks to portray the Senate provisions as providing broad new authority for the conduct of covert actions, with a corresponding lessening of congressional oversight. That is not an accurate characterization of these provisions. In fact, title VII would impose a number of new requirements, limitations, and prohibitions on the process for Presidential approval of covert actions and the reporting thereof to Congress, thereby increasing the ability of the intelligence committees to conduct adequate oversight.

The second issue I would like to mention involves physical searches conducted in the United States to collect intelligence information. I believe it would surprise most Americans, including many Members of Congress, that such searches, including the surreptitious entry of the homes of American citizens, occur periodically—without a court order of any kind and without statutory authorization. I and other members of the committee have been troubled by this state of affairs for several years and believe it is important to impose a requirement that a court order be obtained to safeguard the privacy rights of our citizens whenever the FBI seeks to conduct a physical search for the purposes of intelligence collection. My subcommittee conducted a hearing on this issue in May, and had hoped to include physical search legislation in this authorization bill. However, because our legislative recommendations were going to be reported so late in the session, sufficient time did not remain for the Judiciary Committee to fully consider the measure. Therefore on September 12, primarily for discussion purposes I introduced H.R. 5588, the Intelligence Search Procedures Act. It would subject physical searches to essentially the same court order requirements that were successfully applied to foreign intelligence electronic surveillance in 1978. I want to alert my colleagues to the issues addressed in H.R. 5588, and I look forward to addressing its provisions in the next Congress. In my judgment, due process and the fourth amendment to the Constitution require that independent judicial review and a court order be secured before a private citizen is subjected to a physical search by the Government.

Mr. Chairman, during the course of our consideration of this bill a number of important amendments will be offered relating to so-called covert operations. I look forward to debating those issues. Regardless of how they are disposed of, however, I urge my colleagues to support this authorization bill on final passage.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, as I was reciting the litany of excellent staff people, I forgot one of our most valuable staff members, Mr. Dick Gieza. Forgive me, Mr. Gieza. Also, Mr. Mike O'Neill, our very skilled clerk.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBEST].

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Chairman, I want to also join with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] and others in expressing appreciation to the Chair, and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] and other members as well as the staff of the committee. I think those who are on the committee, in the atmosphere in which we work, work very well together, with concern for the best interests of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this authorization for the intelligence community for the next year. I would encourage my colleagues who have not made it available to themselves to go to H.R. 405 of the Capitol and look at the Classified Annex which is available to Members of Congress to see what it is that some of these funds are expended for.

As was mentioned earlier, it is difficult and I guess impossible to speak about some of the things that are in the budget for intelligence authorizations. I think it is very important that Members look at what is happening in terms of reality and what is happening in terms of, I think, responsibility by the intelligence community, and certainly by the committee. As we are experiencing and have been now for several months a basic breaking out of peace all over the world, certainly in some of the most sensitive areas, and areas we have been concerned of in the past, primarily the Soviet Union, I think it is important to note that there are still real problems which exist, as evidenced today in the Persian Gulf, and in what is referred to as the gulf crisis.

I think it is such incidents that point out that in fact while there may be a peaceful breaking out in the world in many areas, there is also a very tremendous need for continuation of a very active and very adequate intelligence community.

In fact, some of us, certainly myself, Mr. Chairman, are of the basic feeling that maybe at a time of build down in other areas this may be a time to look for potential building up of intelligence. As we are pulling back and we are becoming fewer in numbers of Americans around the world in sensitive areas, it becomes more and more important that we know exactly what is going on. We can do this basically and primarily only through adequate and efficient intelligence.

We need to make certain that what is being said and being done is actually what is being done.

I think we need to look very carefully that while in the past there has been a tendency to link somewhat the spending levels of the Department of Defense and of the intelligence comm unity, that those need to be separated and looked at based on what their own needs, are what their requirements are, and yet while they are many times linked very closely together, they do serve different purposes.

I did not coin the phrase or the idea and I am not even certain who did Mr. Chairman, but I think it is important to point out that intelligence and defense and the consequences of defense and peace are the two areas in this country that every American shares equally in, regardless of income level, regardless of race. Everyone who is in America shares equally in the freedom that we have. I think it has been due to lot of adequate capability that we have had in the past, and I want to be very careful as we move forward that we do not throw away 40 years of potential problems because of 1 year of peace and that we do not move faster than some of our adversaries would like to see us move, that we do not build down in areas in which they would be willing to give up something in their own regard to see us build down in, but rather that we recognize this as something positive, but we also recognize very quickly that can change as rapidly in the other direction as we have changed in the breakout of peace.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this opportunity and I thank the gentleman for yielding the time to me.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER], a formidable opponent in this coming election, I might add.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Illinois, for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, several months ago one of America's top spies who had just recently retired was pushing a shopping cart through one of the grocery stores here in the Washington, DC, area and he heard a voice calling to him saying, "We won, we won," and he turned around to look and see who was calling and what it was all about. It turned out it was another one of America's top spies who also had recently retired, both men having put their lives on the line for their country many times, saying to each other as they stood there with their shopping carts, "We won the cold war. Finally, after 40 years, we won."

And indeed, Mr. Chairman, we have and it is a cause for celebration, but is also a cause for caution, because we find ourselves in te very American condition of wanting to be so thankful and celebrate and assume that because we have won the cold war, our worries are over, America is indeed secure.

We find ourselves really in a transition year, in a year where the cold war is behind us, a new world order is in front of us with the opportunity for us to help mold that new world order, and yet a world which is still dangerous and te challenge and the risk to us is that we refuse to see the world as ir really is, that we as Americans so naturally want to see it through rose colored glasses because of our fundamental optimist and do not recognize that indeed, it still is a very dangerous world.

As we speak today, Mr. Chairman, throughout Washington in the Embassies of our enemies and up at the United Nations, there are literally hundreds of intelligence agents watching C-SPAN and watching this debate. We have a different kind of audience today who are not only watching the debate, you can bet they are taping the debate as well to send it back home so that they can analyze what we say here today, hoping to discern some shift in our direction, hoping to understand not only what we plan to do in America to preserve and protect the security of our country, but even more importantly, perhaps, hoping to measure the extent of our resolve to continue providing security for our country as we move into this new world order.

Now, we have heard much talk and we are going to hear more today about the idea of eliminating covert operations. Why should we have covert operations when the cold war is over? And yet if we stop and pause and think for a moment, is there any among us who does not wish that we would have had covert operations to tell us what is happening in Iraq? Is there any among us who does not wish that we had very effective convert operations to tell us what was happening in Iran for the past 10 years? Is there any among us who does not wish that we had the kind of operations necessary to know what was happening in Libya and Lebanon so we could get our hands on our hostages and indeed in the killing fields of Cambodia? Is there anybody who eally does not believe that covert operations are very necessary to help provide us with the kind of information we need in order to protect America and to protect American citizens in this dangerous world in which we live?

Yes, it is a changing world, and the targets for intelligence have got to change. The intelligence community, it is no secret, many of them have made their careers by focusing on the Soviet threat, and indeed the Soviets still are the only ones who could blow us to smithereens, but we all acknowledge that there are other threats today. There are other threats which must get more attention. Certainly we must give more emphasis to the narcotics threat, not only to the narcotics threat, per se, but to the narcoterrorism which may well engulf our country in the years ahead.

We have had many successes. The intelligence community has had many successes in dealing with the narcotics threat. I wish we could talk about them in detail here, but as we all know in the intelligence business, it is only the failures that we can talk about and it is the successes which must go unheralded.

And yes, the terrorism threat, certainly we must focus on that as well. There are new threats. They are very serious threats and we must focus on those threats. We must give the support to the intelligence community which it needs so that it can indeed focus and address these very serious threats facing our countries.

I would close by quoting Felix Dzerzhinsky, the founder of Cheka, the Soviet intelligence system from which came the KGB and virtually the model for all the Marxist intelligence systems and operations in the world. He was talking to Lenin one day and Dzerzhinsky said to Lenin, "the people in the West are wishful thinkers, so what we must do is give them what they want to think."

We must be very careful, Mr. Chairman, that we do not let this dangerous world in which we live beguile us and guide us and soothe us into thinking that there are not serious dangers out there. We must more than ever provide and protect America, and as we do that we must also reorder our priorities in intelligence to focus on the real and most pressing threats facing us in the decade ahead.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, there has been some interesting philosophizing in the well today, and I would like to make a contribution to it.

But, first, let me add my congratulations to the staff of the Select Intelligence Committee. I have never seen a better staff on either side of the Hill on any committee or one that operates in a more bipartisan fashion.

Also let me just reiterate what I said yesterday before our discussion on the floor was interrupted with trying to balance the budget of our great country about the people who work for our intelligence agencies. I am just sick and tired of the incessant Hollywood image that most of these fine people are either engaged in drug running or looking the other way when it occurs. And this is not a recent accusation, but goes back to the Vietnam period, indeed all the way back to the middle fifties. The truth is contrary to what one of the greater intellectual fops of our generation, Bill Moyers, perpetrated on television in his pseudo-documentary called "The Secret War", in which he viciously castigated both parties and every administration from Truman on forward. Moyers' argued that somehow or other intelligence agencies run the Government of the United States, not the executive branch or our great parties on this Jenkins Hill. This, of course, is delusional. A leftist fantasy that was shot down when the left-wing loonies at the Christie Institute brought the secret team conspiracy theory into court.

The intelligence communities of the United States, those excellently trained men and women who come before us as analysts or as advocates of various programs, are the finest public servants I have ever seen in my life.

Now, if the chairman will indulge me just a bit of philosophy: I said on the House floor during the debate on our defense bill to one of our better orators, if not the best, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] that Plato—the greatest of the Greek philosophers—had said that only the dead have seen the end of war. Mr. DELLUMS got up and said that it was a cynical remark.

Well, a lot of philosophers are cynics.

Other great historians from Josephus to Toynbee have said all of history is military conflict interrupted by very brief periods of peace. Another cynical remark, but historically accurate, unfortunately.

Take one of the oldest of all warlords, Szun Zsu of China, whose books are still taught after three millenia, from Sandhurst to West Point, to the Air Force Academy to the Naval Academy. He said this about warfare: The greatest victor of all is that who wins without ever firing a shot. And that is what every Member in this Chamber dreams for, prays for, will be the outcome of Desert Shield. A victory for freedom. A collapse of the vicious tyranny. An end of the atrocities committed by "Sadist Insane" and his gang in Baghdad. And an end to his cruel occupation without firing a shot.

Now, how do you do that? Well, no less a person than Szun Zsu said that the principal, the cardinal rule of anybody who is faced with conflict or trying to avoid it is to "know thy enemy." That is what intelligence is all about.

When President Carter was sworn in, bless his peanut-pickin' heart, he did away with about 700 or 800 hardworking, talented people within the CIA with an institutional memory of about a quarter of a century each. We paid a heavy price for that for years to come because there is no replacing the infantrymen. Ask two majority Members who have sons over there involved in Desert Shield right now, Mr. DE LA GARZA and Mr. COSTELLO. The ultimate weapon on the ground is that young soldier, that marine, that sailor. And the ultimate person in intelligence is what we refer to in our abbreviation, humint, human intelligence. That we had no human assets in Baghdad is one of the reasons they were able to mount an operation, even though some voices were saying that an attack was coming. Those voices were heard least by the Kuwaiti Government. We need people of high skill and talent in our intelligence agencies so that we can know in an ever-dangerous world, in spite of the collapse of communism, what is happening around the world.

I mentioned yesterday a General Electric commercial that has been running, it seems like 2 years now, on every serious discussion show across the networks and PBS and CNN. I will close with the two opening lines of that: "Freedom is wonderful, freedom is everything."

One of these great clerks behind me said every time he sees it he gets goose pimples.

In the defense of freedom, the first line of defense is intelligence, the people who are trying to find out what we are up against.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I have no more requests for time, but I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to yield whatever time I have left to the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], a very valuable member of our committee.

Mrs. KENNELLY. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the authorization, I thank the chairman and take this opportunity to commend the staff.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN], a member of the committee.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to compliment both the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] for doing an excellent job of making sure that our intelligence operations are properly monitored and that there is effective oversight to ensure that the appropriate role for intelligence is carried out by our Government.

The purpose of intelligence is to provide informational support for our Government to carry out its defense and foreign policy objectives.

Intelligence does not set policy. On the contrary, it provides the support base and relevant information so that the policymakers in the administration and in Congress can achieve this country's foreign policy and defense objectives.

Intelligence operatives are the servants of others in Government, not the actors; not the initiators of policy. Intelligence must do that in order to not create the mistakes of the past.

I would say that not only Mr. BEILENSON and his staff have done an excellent job, but I would compliment the administration, this administration, for doing a better job of understanding the proper role of intelligence and not making the terrible mistakes of the previous administration as it related to intelligence and its role in foreign policy.

Now, as Mr. SHUSTER and others talked about, those defense and foreign policy objectives of the United States have changed dramatically in the last year. I will not run through the litany of world change in 1989 and 1990, but there is one thing that has changed that I think needs to have more focus by the intelligence community. That has to do with economic intelligence.

With respect to the economic realities of the world, it is important to remember that in this changing world the greatest threat to America is in the economic arena now. It is not in the military arena, it is in the economic arena, both from our allies as well as from our adversaries that we will experience our greatest challenges. These economic challenges are the threats to the American way of life, to jobs, to our ability to produce, to our ability to provide a standard of living second to none in this world.

The intelligence agencies of our Government must be alert to that and must provide appropriate information so that our Government and our policy-makers are able to make those decisions necessary to protect America's interests. And whether those interest have to do with ownership of U.S. assets, U.S. companies, U.S. patents and trademarks, scientific and technical data, or whether they have to do with the protection of U.S. jobs, unfair competition, and all sort of other things that relate to the economic structure of our country, our intelligence agencies must be collecting and providing information and disseminating it to Government policymakers to make sure we know what the rest of the world is doing with respect to economic matters that affect our national interests.

The impact of economic competition in the world on the average U.S. citizen is great. It affects his job; his or her economic security is at stake with what is happening in the world as it is changing. The challenges from Japan, the European Community, Brazil, and a host of other countries to our economic security are significant. Opportunities with respect to changing United States-Soviet relations are great, but so are the emerging challenges from other nations in the world that want to take the lead from the United States in manufacturing, in research in technology and in the financial markets. That is why we must focus as much as possible, and as relevant, making sure our intelligence agencies provide that information based on economic issues.

It has been said that political theory is simply the rationalization of economic self-interest. Our intelligence agencies can and should be a powerful information base to protect our economic self-interest.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to our friend, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, first, this is a very exciting committee to serve on, one of the most interesting. Unfortunately, you can never talk about what you do.

The chemistry between the chairman and the ranking minority member I think has made this committee especially interesting and positive, especially the Chairman who, I think, in his opening remarks laid out what we are trying to do with this intelligence budget.

First it is to scrutinize. Second it is to ensure that we get the best bang for the buck. And I think we are doing that.

I think large credit goes to him and the very fair and impartial and gentlemanly way that he runs the committee. We have to move faster into the new arenas of American national security. The cold war is over. Our intelligence community needs to move into these new areas that have already been discussed, whether they be international narcotics, nuclear proliferation, economic intelligence, drugs, the whole variety of new challenges that are equally of danger to American national security.

Mr. Chairman, there are going to be two good amendments today on Angola that I commend to this body, good amendments that relate to the end of the cold war and the United States moving into new relationships in the Third World. They are moderate amendments. They are amendments that deal with incentives for peace.

I also commend to my colleagues one amendment that I will have on Cambodia that I believe is consistent with this process of moving away into new challenges, away from cold war issues and into new priorities for American foreign policy.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 of the minutes allotted to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, there was a comment made earlier that intelligence now should be able to tell us what Mr. Hussein is doing. I would like to say that I look at intelligence a little differently.

Mr. Chairman, I think our intelligence community should have played a part in preventing Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in the first place.

I would like to say this to the Members: I think that we are a little preoccupied with war ourselves. Our priorities reflect that in our budget.

Second of all, we have several major government academies. They are all military. We teach our brightest young minds how to be military warriors.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I have a bill that called for the creation of a national academy of science and technology. I had over 100 cosponsors. After graduation students shall serve 4 years in some Government service other than military and, after it is all over, these students come back and work for the government.

Mr. Chairman, 100 cosponsors said, "Gee, that's a lot of money. We better not look at that this year."

Mr. Chairman, I would like to just caution our Members about one thing. It is a fact. I heard about Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on the CNN news, just like most of my colleagues did. I literally wonder if our strong chairman with close ties with the intelligence network knew, but I want to know why our intelligence community has satellites that can read the small print off a pack of cigarettes from outer space, but did not see the mobilization of 120,000 troops and 5,000 tanks on the border moving on Kuwait.

Mr. Chairman, I think those are legitimate questions that Congress should ask, and I do not think there are any two better chairmen in the House than the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], and I would hope they would work toward those ends.

I have a little amendment today that I am going to be bringing up. I do not care what the chairmen do with it respectively to make it appropriate for this bill. I do not want to see it thrown out in conference. If they are going to be purchasing goods covertly, they can buy American goods overtly, and that is what my amendment does.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY].

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], my very good friend, for giving me these 2 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] for releasing this time so that I could speak.

Mr. Chairman, most of the Members are going to talk about the strategic importance of stopping aid to UNITA. I want to deal with a very human problem today, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I want to talk about these children who we have maimed with our bombs.

These beautiful children in the face of tragedy, Mr. Chairman, continue to smile. Why are we doing this to these children? Is it because they are Angolans? I think not. Is it because they are Africans? I think not. Is it because they are Marxists? Certainly we would not be so preposterous to think that these beautiful children are Marxists.

Mr. Chairman, we are doing it because we are blind politically. We are doing it because the cold war continues to rage in Africa, and the victims are these beautiful, innocent children, Mr. Chairman.

We need to stop the armed aid to UNITA so that these children, 55,000, Mr. Chairman, more than the people who reside in the city of Bellflower, CA, which I represent, more than the people who reside in the city of Gardena, which I represent, 55,000 of these innocent children, these women, are maimed because of our bombs in the coffee plantations, and in the schoolyards and on the country roads. That is the reason why I come to the well of the House to appeal to my colleagues as mothers and fathers and uncles, so that they can see the tragedy of our policy in Angola.

I ask my colleagues, "As you listen to the debate today, think about these children. Think about what we are doing to them."

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY].

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I spoke the other day on the rule, so I do not intend to take all this time today, and I will reserve time for addressing the question of Angola during the debate on the amendments.

However, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to rise and comment briefly about the changing environment in intelligence and some of the new challenges that face us.

I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN] spoke articulately on some of the challenges that lie before us, and the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], and I am sure others in this Chamber have as well.

I was also taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] about CNN. As my colleagues know, it is true that television, mass media, has had a tremendous impact on the change in the world this year. I believe that the television coverage of the events in Eastern Europe accelerated the pace of change that occurred there, and it provides a tremendous resource to us today.

I think many of these political changes, the globalization of the communications, has allowed the aspirations and hopes of people all over the world to be expressed and to feel that they are not isolated. It is only in those countries like Iraq and others, where they do not have free communication, where they do not have free press. Countries such as in Angola, where they still have one-party systems, that do not allow for freedom of expression, we do not see this dramatic change.

So, Mr. Chairman, what I would argue is perhaps it is not a question of whether the U.S. Government ought to be funding CNN, which has been advocated. I think what we need to do is to continue to use our resources in this Government, and the prestige and the diplomacy of this Government, to try to open up those systems so that communication can get there so we can have this cross-fertilization of democratic ideas around the globe.

Also I would like to indicate that the agencies in the intelligence community are going to have to change. They are going to be challeged in a way that they never have been before.

Some have mentioned satellites and capabilities. The real issue is how do we get into the intentions of individuals.

We knew there was a mobilization on the Kuwaiti border, but we did not know the intentions of a dictator because there is no freedom of communication in that one-party country.

We have to improve our human capability to not only understand the intentions of tyrants, and dictators, and people that threaten militarily other nations and freedoms, but also those of competitor governments. It is becoming more that governments are competing economically against the United States, and I think we have to have an understanding of their intentions and capabilities as well.

Mr. Chairman, it is true that the cold war is over.

The Warsaw Pact threat has diminished, if not totally collapsed. I believe that the changes in the Soviet Union are positive. I am pleased that Mikhail Gorbachev was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. But obviously he did not get the Nobel Prize for economics, because they have a long way to go there, and there is going to be much turmoil and difficulty as they try to make the shift from a Marxist system to more of a capitalist system.

Furthermore, when you look at the trends in the future, I think that the nature of threats will change. We have to understand them better. By year 2020 the population of Africa will exceed the combined populations of Japan, North America, Europe, and the Soviet Union. China's population will be eclipsed by India. Brazil will double in population. The claims on global resources will be greater.

We have to have an appreciation of where those strains and challenges are going to be. We need to use our intelligence capabilities to further improve the world's ability to feed itself and to deal with strains on the ecostructure and, of course, the economic competition that could arise as well.

Mr. Chairman, all of these changes are going to challenge the intelligence community, and I believe that a valid, robust intelligence capability is vital to our overall national security.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say in response to my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY], that we are all concerned about the loss of life of young children in Angola and the maiming that is taking place of women and children because of the indiscriminate bombing that is taking place and the mines that have been placed in the fields of battle and around villages. But I would just like to say that much of these terrible tragedies have occurred because of Soviet weapons and Cuban weapons that have been used by the Communist MPLA.

As a matter of fact, when the recent attack on Mavinga took place, because they could not bomb at low levels, the MPLA was doing carpet bombing from 30,000 and 35,000 feet so they would not be hit by ground-to-air missiles.

I would just say that we must make absolutely sure, when we are talking about this issue, that we do not misplace the responsibility.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I stated that to Mr. Savimba. I am not here to place blame on UNITA or the MPLA. I am simply here to say, let us stop bombing. Let us save the children.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered under the 5-minute rule by title and each title is considered as read. The amendments recommended by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Armed Services printed in the reported bill are considered as having been adopted, and are considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment.

The Clerk will designate title I.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

"(2) Any determination and authorization by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be certified by the Secretary in writing and shall include a specification of the laws or regulations for which compliance by the commercial activity concerned is not required consistent with this section.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BEILENSON

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEILENSON: On page 4, line 7:

Strike our "331" and insert in lieu thereof "240".

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment merely corrects an error in the drafting of the bill. It is purely technical. I have discussed this and cleared it with my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], and I ask for adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RICHARDSON

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICHARDSON: On page 25, after line 18, add the following:

TITLE VI—CAMBODIAN NONCOMMUNIST RESISTANCE

SEC. 601. RESTRICTIONS ON ASSISTANCE FOR THE CAMBODIAN NONCOMMUNIST RESISTANCE FORCES.

(a) RESTRICTIONS.—Funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act may be obligated and expended for assistance for the Cambodian noncommunist resistance forces only as follows:

(1) Any such assistance shall be limited to nonlethal assistance.

(2) Any such assistance shall be consistent with section 906 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985 (relating to the prohibition on assistance to the Khmer Rouge).

(3) Any funds to be made available for such assistance shall be allocated for that purpose within 30 days after date of enactment of this Act.

(4) Within 30 days after the conclusion of a comprehensive political settlement involving the 4 Cambodian factions, the unexpended balance of the funds allocated for assistance for the Cambodian noncommunist resistance pursuant to paragraph (3) shall be transferred to such agency of the United States Government as the President may designate. The President may not designate an intelligence agency for purposes of this paragraph. Such funds shall be expended in ways that are consistent with the comprehensive political settlement.

(5) After funds are transferred pursuant to paragraph (4), funds authorized to be appropriated by this Act (and any other funds available to any intelligence agency during fiscal year 1991) may not be obligated or expended by any intelligence agency for assistance for the Cambodian noncommunist resistance forces.

(b) RELATION TO FOREIGN ASSISTANCE FUNDS.—Funds made available for assistance for the Cambodian noncommunist resistance forces pursuant to this section are in addition to any funds that are made available for assistance for the Cambodian noncommunist resistance forces under the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1991.

(c) INTELLIGENCE SHARING AND COLLECTION.—Subsection (a) does not apply with respect to intelligence sharing or intelligence collection.

(d) DEFINITION OF INTELLIGENCE AGENCY.—As used in this section, the term "intelligence agency" means any agency within the intelligence community, within the meaning of section 3.4(f) of Executive Order 12333 (December 4, 1981).

Mr. RICHARDSON (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment I think is very necessary. I believe it has been worked out. It deals with Cambodia. The purpose of the amendment is to provide a clear expression of congressional approval for the adoption of a consistent approach by the United States in its support for the non-Communist resistance in Cambodia.

Mr. Chairman, it has the further effect of establishing a mechanism within this bill by which the United States will be able to assist in the implementation of a negotiated settlement for Cambodia, as soon as the four factions have concluded an agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that United States policy should seek to advance the Cambodian peace process, which is at a critical juncture. A negotiated solution to the civil war in Cambodia will best guarantee the ability of the people of that country to freely determine their own destiny. That result, which is the best insurance possible against a return to power of the Khmer Rouge, appears to be closer at hand than at any time in memory.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment creates a framework which encourages both the conclusion of the peace agreement and the smooth transition to the challenging days such an agreement will herald. I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON].

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] is acceptable to members of the committee on this side of the aisle. The desire for a peaceful end to the conflict in Cambodia is as bipartisan as the intentions that the Khmer Rouge not be permitted to return to power.

To the extent that this amendment contributes to those ends, it represents a worthwhile addition to the bill. It is my understanding the administration does not object to the amendment. Accordingly, we are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, we are prepared to accept the amendment, with the proviso that the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] will support his amendment in conference unyieldingly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, we are pleased to accept the amendment.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman for what I think is a very constructive amendment, which should make it possible for us to achieve a broader measure of bipartisan support for our policy toward Cambodia than we have had in this House for some time.

As the gentleman will undoubtedly recall, a few months ago we had a rather vigorous debate on our aid program for the non-Communist resistance in the context of our consideration of the foreign aid bill. Those Members who believed that that kind of assistance is important as a way of facilitating progress toward a peaceful settlement of the Cambodian conflict prevailed.

Since that time, some very significant developments have taken place, the most important of which has been the agreement among the five permanent members of the Security Council on a framework for peace in Cambodia, which was subsequently deemed acceptable by each of the four Cambodian factions, and which has brought us very, very close to the conclusion of an agreement which will end the fighting in Cambodia, provide for the introduction of a U.N. peacekeeping force, and make possible an internationally supervised free and fair election.

This amendment, by making explicit what was implicit, and for making a provision for the transfer of these resources in the intelligence bill to other agencies of the Government once a comprehensive settlement is agreed upon and actually implemented and begins to take effect, has created I think the basis for broad bipartisan support in pursuit of our policy, which represents in my judgment the last best chance we have of bringing peace to Cambodia, and preventing Pol Pot and the Khmer Rouge from returning to power in that country.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] for his efforts, and I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ]. As the gentleman and others have said, the purpose of the amendment is so that this issue is openly debated before the American people.

Recent progress in efforts to negotiate an end to the civil war in Cambodia provide reasons for optimism but also offer a perfect opportunity to reevaluate United States policy goals and objectives. At a minimum, U.S. policy should be geared to supporting the peace process in a way that does not strengthen the hand of the Khmer Rouge.

The most effective way to accomplish that result is through programs of assistance that are openly connected to the U.S. Government. United States support is thereby well-defined and unmistakable, and the position of the non-Communist Cambodian resistance [NCR] is thereby strengthened both materially and by perception.

The foreign aid budget already contains a program of assistance for the NCR. To further the goals of the agreement recently reached in Jakarta, that program should be enhanced in such a way that the non-Communist resistance factions remain able to preserve their places in the negotiation process.

An openly acknowledged U.S. assistance effort can support the NCR without weakening the government in Phnom Penh, which would only benefit the Khmer Rouge. Our recent diplomatic initiative toward the Cambodian Government was made with the understanding on both sides that United States foreign aid to the NCR would continue. That program obviously is not an impediment to a meaningful United States role in achieving a Cambodian settlement.

The United States foreign aid program for the NCR does not benefit the Khmer Rouge because it does not encourage further military action against the Government. Similarly, it does not embolden the NRC to seek to advance its goals through military means. The overt aid program is therefore most in harmony with a United States policy geared toward resolving the Cambodian situation through free elections rather than force of arms.

Concentrating U.S. assistance in an overt program also maximizes whatever leverage we have on the leaders of the NRC factions, particularly Prince Sihanouk. To the extent these leaders value U.S. support, cover changes in funding levels can provide necessary encouragement to adopt a realistic negotiating posture.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] a question. The language of this amendment indicates that the unspent funds that the gentleman is talking about would be transferred to any agency recommended by the President.

□ 1540

There are no limitations on what agencies that could be transferred to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, it cannot be an intelligence agency. The transfer would be to any kind of defense account; it would not be to a foreign assistance account.

Mr. OBEY. What language does the gentleman have defining how it might be spent?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The second page of the amendment which deals with the language says, "shall be transferred to such agency of the United States Government as the President may designate. The President may not designate an intelligence agency for purposes of this paragraph."

Mr. OBEY. But my question is how may this money be spent? May it be spent only for operations with respect to Cambodia, or might it be spent in other ways?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Exclusively for Cambodia.

Mr. OBEY. Where does it say that?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe right where I just referred, "shall be transferred to such agency of the United States Government as the President may designate."

Mr. OBEY. It says the money shall be transferred to another agency, but it does not, as I read the language, have any kind of limitation on how that money might be used once it is transferred.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. Surely, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I think the text of the amendment makes it clear that these funds are authorized and appropriated and can be obligated and expended solely for assistance for the Cambodia non-Communist resistance forces.

The amendment also provides in section (a)(2) that: "Any such assistance shall be consistent with section 906 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985," which relates to the prohibition on assistance to the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. OBEY. I understand. I am not concerned at this point about how the money might be spent within Cambodia. My question is could the President use this money to fund any other program he wanted to outside of Cambodia?

Mr. SOLARZ. My interpretation of the amendment is absolutely not.

Mr. OBEY. I would like to know how the gentleman interprets that language, because that is not my interpretation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, let me read to the gentleman another relevant section, section (b) of the amendment:

Funds made available for assistance for the Cambodia nonCommunist resistance forces pursuant to this section are in addition to any funds that are made available for assistance for the Cambodian non-Communist resistance forces under the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act.

It is strictly to the Cambodian non-Communist resistance.

Mr. OBEY. It is at this time. The gentleman is telling me that he is certain that it is after the transfer?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Mr. SOLARZ. If the gentleman will yield further, and if I can supplement the observation of the gentleman from New Mexico, I think that is absolutely clear. If there is any ambiguity about it, I think this legislative history should make it absolutely clear. In discussions with the administration which consented to this amendment it was clearly understood that the only purpose for which these funds could, or would or should be used would be for the purposes referred to in the legislation itself, which is the non-Communist resistance in Cambodia.

Mr. OBEY. Let me ask two other questions.

How would the 302(b) numbers be affected with respect to budget authority if there is any remaining funds?

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will yield, the funds would go strictly within the Defense Department accounts. They would not go outside of those Defense Department accounts.

Mr. OBEY. Is the gentleman telling me that the funds cannot be transferred to AID?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They could be.

Mr. OBEY. AID is not within the Defense Department account.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Under the purposes of this amendment, the funds subject to the budget act are strictly within the defense appropriations account.

Mr. OBEY. Does the gentleman from New York want to comment on that?

Mr. SOLARZ. If the gentleman will yield, my impression is that under this amendment, if the President chooses to transfer money, it cannot be transferred to any other intelligence agency of the Government. But there is no restriction on what other agencies it might be transferred to, so long as they are not intelligence agencies.

Now I would imagine there are all sorts of practical administrative and bureaucratic problems. I doubt that he is going to transfer the money to the Coast Guard. But under the terms of the amendment, if he should choose to transfer it, it can be transferred to any agency which is not an intelligence agency.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will yield, let me just assure the gentleman that we are going to go to conference on this issue very shortly, and I want to assure the gentleman that his concerns would be taken care of, specifically that it would be relegated to the purposes the gentleman said.

Mr. OBEY. How does the gentleman know what purpose it is I want to relegate it to? I mean, here is my problem.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBEY was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. OBEY. We have a bill which is classified. We cannot talk about the numbers contained in this bill. We have a program which is classified, moneys which might be, or some which might be, transferred out for another purpose, and at this point I cannot tell what purpose that money might be used for. I cannot tell whether that is going to be counted against the 302(b) ceiling for function 150 account in the budget, for either BA or outlay, and we are supposed to accept the amendment.

Frankly, I am very confused at this point, because we are in the process of adopting a budget which sets specific ceilings for defense, for foreign assistance and for domestic discretionary spending. The administration went to great lengths to try to get a separate cap for foreign assistance, and now my question is whether or not this is going to wind up, or I am wondering whether this may wind up being additional spending within the foreign assistance account above and beyond the 302 numbers, whether this will be counted against our ceiling, whether it will not, and I am trying to figure out about 20 hours after we have passed the initial budget resolution whether we are going to stick to it or not.

Mr. SOLARZ. If the gentleman will yield further, let me say first that if the gentleman from Wisconsin will look on page 2 of the Richardson amendment, it says that such funds shall be expended, assuming they are transferred, "in ways that are consistent with the comprehensive political settlement." So one thing we do know is that it does have to be for Cambodians.

Second, on the question of how this relates to the 302(b) allocations, I think the answer to that is that that question, which you now raise for the first time, but which is a very legitimate question and in which you certainly have a very real interest, is going to have to be worked out. I have discussed this with people in the administration, and my impression is that insofar as the cap on foreign aid is concerned that they would be prepared to agree to exceptions with that cap with respect to this money.

Mr. OBEY. If that is the case, then therein lies the rub, because the administration wants exceptions to the cap. I do not want exceptions to the cap. I did not want that "turkey" arrangement which the administration worked out with the Congress, but if we get it, I want to know that it is going to be enforced, and I do not want to see foreign aid assistance ceilings breached 20 hours after we have agreed to a budget.

Mr. SOLARZ. I would say, if I may, to my very good friend from Wisconsin, that we may have an honest difference of opinion on this. What I can tell the gentleman is that the overall amount of money requested for Cambodia is not, and which is actually spent on Cambodia will not be increased by this amendment. As the gentleman knows, we have money for Cambodia in a number of different pots. This presumably is one of them, and your bill is another.

Mr. OBEY. If I can reclaim my time, with all due respect, that is not my concern. I am not talking about how much money is going to be spent within Cambodia. My concern is that under the powers given to the OMB under the budget arrangement passed by the Congress, OMB is going to have extraordinary powers to decide who exceeds spending ceilings and who does not. We are giving the administration additional authority to define where money is going to go. We do not know how much. We do not know where and we do not know how it is going to be counted. But we are supposed to support it.

As far as I am concerned, count me out under those circumstances.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's amendment. I share the gentleman's concern. I am curious if in the amendment there was a requirement that a reprogramming action be taken which would thus require votes by the relevant committees, whether that would be preferable or answer the concerns of the gentleman as opposed to a blanket transfer authority that exists in the amendment today?

Mr. OBEY. That might marginally decrease my concern, but it would not remove my opposition, because as far as I am concerned, the administration has gained incredible authority for scorekeeping under the new budget arrangement. I think we are going to have runaway accounting in OMB under the budget arrangement. In addition to that, we are giving them additional holes through which they can pour money. I think that is a very bad precedent, and I think we ought not to support it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will yield further, I do not know if he was here in the earlier part of the discussion of this amendment. We cannot discuss these issues as openly as the gentleman wants, but let me just tell the gentleman that the purpose of this amendment is to make the policy, the assistance, open, to open it up.

Mr. OBEY. I understand the purpose. The problem is the effect. Purposes are always wonderful around here. The effects are often screwy. This is one time when I think you achieve that result, and so I simply am going to oppose the amendment if there is a rollcall on it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI.) The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT: Page 13, after line 14, insert the following new section:

SEC. 403. BUY-AMERICAN REQUIREMENT.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE DIRECTOR.—If the Director, with the concurrence of the United States Trade Representative and the Secretary of Commerce, determines that the public interest so desires, the Director is authorized to award to a domestic firm a contract that, under the use of competitive procedures, would be awarded to a foreign firm, if—

(1) the final product of the domestic firm will be completely assembled in the United States;

(2) when completely assembled, not less than 51 percent of the final product of the domestic firm will be domestically produced; and

(3) the difference between the bids submitted by the foreign and domestic firms is not more than 6 percent. In determining under this subsection whether the public interest so requires, the Director shall take into account United States international obligations and trade relations.

(b) LIMITED APPLICATION.—This section shall not apply to the extent to which—

(1) such applicability would not be in the public interest;

(2) compelling national security considerations require otherwise; or

(3) the United States Trade Representative determines that such an award would be in violation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

(c) LIMITATION.—This section shall apply only to contracts made related to the issuance of any grant made under this Act for which—

(1) amounts are authorized by this act (including the amendment made by this act) to be made available; and

(2) solicitation for bids are issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Director shall report to the Congress on contracts covered under this section and entered into with foreign entities in fiscal years 1990 and 1991 and shall report to the Congress on the number of Contracts that meet the requirements of subsection (a) but which are determined by the United States Trade Representative to be in violation of the General Agreement or an international agreement to which the United States is a party. The Director shall also report to the Congress on the number of contracts covered under this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) and awarded based upon the parameters of this section.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) SECRETARY.—The term "Director" means the Director of Central Intelligence.

(2) DOMESTIC FIRM.—The term "Domestic Firm" means a business entity that is incorporated in the United States and that conducts business operations in the United States.

(3) FOREIGN FIRM.—The term "foreign firm" means a business entity not described in paragraph (2).

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimoius consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, last year we passed this similar amendment. It was removed in conference.

I could understand the sensitivity of purchases made in these accounts. I am willing to make the following statements, understanding those dynamics, I am going to request of both the minority vice chairman and the majority chairman that they accept the amendment and tailor and make such classified structural language that may be necessary so that this emphasis be placed on maintaining some taxpayer purchases on our side of the balance line.

I realize there are some significant questions. I appreciate the fact that you had accepted it last year, but I am going to encourage you to make such adjustments and to try and keep it in as a procurement policy with whatever changes you deem so necessary.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman and to my colleagues that the committee has had an opportunity to examine the gentleman's amendment.

We note that the amendment makes discretionary with the Director of Central Intelligence the use of the authority conveyed with respect to contract awards. In addition, we note that an exception is provided for compelling national security considerations.

I believe these provisions will address concerns which might otherwise be raised by the intelligence agencies.

With those understandings, we on this side of the aisle are prepared to accept the amendment, I say to the gentleman, and that we will do our level best, and I hope, frankly, this year we will be successful to keep the gentleman's language in in conference.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman. I think it is an excellent amendment. We are certainly happy to accept it on this side and pledge to fight for it in conference.

I have no illusions about how we will fare in conference, but I am ever optimistic. I intend to fight for the gentleman's amendment.

If it needs technical correction, we will get that. I think it is a good idea, and we are happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate it. I would also like to say that I appreciate the support of the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY], on the issue we have discussed and really want it to be known that whatever changes you make, as long as the integrity of the amendment is in there, I appreciate the support.

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Chairman, of all the agencies of the Federal Government, I believe the intelligence community is the one that probably could manage a buy-American amendment the easiest. I have no problem at all, whatsoever, with the amendment as long as those exceptions are provided in unique areas.

But, for the most part, the intelligence community is probably personnel-driven more than capital, but we need to obviously focus on American-made products and help with competitiveness.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DELLUMS

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DELLUMS: at the end of the bill, add the following:

TITLE IV—ASSISTANCE FOR MILITARY OR PARAMILITARY OPERATIONS IN ANGOLA

SEC. 601. DECLARATION THAT THE UNITED STATES SHOULD NOT SUPPORT MILITARY OR PARAMILITARY OPERATIONS IN ANGOLA UNLESS SUCH SUPPORT HAS BEEN OPENLY ACKNOWLEDGED AND PUBLICLY DEBATED.

The Congress finds that the United States Government—

(1) should not provide "covert assistance" in support of military or paramilitary operations in Angola; and

(2) should provide assistance in support of such operations only if the provision of that assistance is the openly acknowledged policy of the United States.

It is, therefore, the sense of the Congress that the United States Government should not provide any such assistance until the President has publicly informed the Congress and the American people that United States Government support for military or paramilitary operations in Angola is important to the national security and the Congress has expressly approved such assistance.

SEC. 602. PROHIBITION ON COVERT ASSISTANCE.

(a) ANY SUPPORT MUST BE OPENLY ACKNOWLEDGED.—During fiscal year 1991, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, or any other agency or entity of the United States involved in intelligence activities may not obligate or expend any funds—

(1) to conduct, directly or indirectly, military or paramilitary operations in Angola, or

(2) to provide any financial, material, or other assistance, directly or indirectly, to any group engaged in military or paramilitary operations in Angola, unless the use of funds for that purpose is the openly acknowledged policy of the United States Government, as determined in accordance with subsection (b).

(b) PRESIDENTIAL REQUEST AND CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL.—In order to ensure that any United States Government support for military or paramilitary operations in Angola is openly acknowledged, funds may be used for the purposes described in subsection (a) only if—

(1) the President determines that United States Government support for military or paramilitary operations in Angola is important to the national security and submits to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate a request that the Congress approve openly acknowledged United States Government support for those operations; and

(2) the Congress enacts a joint resolution approving United States Government support for military or paramilitary operations in Angola.

Any such support may be provided only to the extent permitted by that joint resolution.

(c) INTERPRETATION OF LIMITATION.—Nothing in this section should be construed to prohibit the obligation or expenditure of funds for—

(1) United States diplomatic activities;

(2) activities of the United States Armed Forces which are reported to the Congress pursuant to section 4(a) of the War Powers Resolution; or

(3) assistance provided through the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees or the International Committee of the Red Cross.

(d) RELATIONSHIP WITH OTHER LAWS.—The requirements of this section may not be waived under the authority of any other provision of law. This section supersedes any provision of law which might otherwise be construed to allow funds to be used for the purposes described in subsection (a). This section shall be superseded only by a provision of law that states explicitly that it is intended to supersede this section.

Mr. DELLUMS (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, this is a significant afternoon. It has been a very long time since we have had any discussion of this issue.

I listened very carefully during the general debate, and I wrote down a few quotes from a number of my colleagues: "Know thy enemy; in spite of the collapse of communism, we must have intelligence-gathering capability," et cetera, as a justification for secret activity.

It is not to this activity that this amendment goes, but, rather, to the activity of covert operations which, Mr. Chairman, and members of the Committee, allow our Nation to carry out policy outside the framework of public scrutiny, public debate, and public accountability with the exception of a few members of the executive branch and the legislative branch of Government.

In this gentleman's humble opinion the whole notion of covert operations flies in the face of an open and democratic society. But we will have that debate later where the broader issue of the role of covert activity in our Nation will be debated and hopefully debated at a very high level.

This amendment goes to one covert operation, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee. It goes to our covert aid to UNITA in Angola, and I would like to begin, Mr. Chairman, where one of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle began his remarks in general debate. He said. "The cold war is behind us. The new world order is in front of us." I would begin there.

I would like to lay out for my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, a number of major themes that will come out in the course of this debate with respect to Angola, because I believe, and will assert here, that the funding of the UNITA guerrillas is a cold war anachronism.

My colleague just said without challenge that the cold war is over. So why then are we carrying out the cold war on the continent of Africa where thousands of black African people die and children die, are maimed, harmed, destroyed because of the cold war?

Yet, the Berlin Wall is down. We are talking about peace as a result of the end of the cold war. The West just gave Mr. Gorbachev a great accolade, but we want to continue covertly to provide aid to UNITA in Angola.

It is a cold war anachronism. I would assert, further, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, that this funding represents an unnecessary and expensive drain on limited resources.

I would remind my colleagues that we are in the throes of a major, major economic crisis in this country, and I do not believe that it is because of frivolous reasons.

There are major policy differences between and among us here as to why we cannot come to grips with the budget. They are substantial, but one thing we all agree upon is that our resources are limited.

This is a limited-dollar environment, and within this framework, we are providing covert dollars that I will show have wreaked incredible havoc on the people of Angola. It is unnecessary, and it is expensive.

Third, Mr. Chairman, I would assert further that covert activities fly in the face of Democratic ideals and the open conduct of foreign policy.

Our foreign policy ought to be open, Mr. Chairman. It should not be made in the dark. I am not talking about gathering intelligence. I am talking about carrying out policy.

This is a democratic society. This is a magnificent exercise to stand on this floor and be able to, for whatever part of the country, whatever political framework, whatever value framework, to debate issues openly. If it makes sense to provide aid, military assistance to UNITA and Angola, why should it not be dealt with in the open? Why should American people, as in most other issues, be able to say we support or we do not support? Mr. Chairman, this new world order is going to require greater understanding, greater communication, greater cooperation between and among the nation states.

I would suggest a covert operation, as we move forward on the other side of the cold war is anachronistic, and threatens the very notions of our democratic ideals. The world is rushing toward democracy. Covert operations threaten those ideals.

Further, Mr. Chairman, I assert covert activities by their nature are often doomed to failure at worst, and constitute embarrassment at the best. If it makes sense do it in the open.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. UNITA is not a freedom fighting organization. It is not. It is a surrogate, carrying out cold war struggles. Last, I will debate Members all day. Mr. Chairman, numerous reports of human rights abuses by UNITA, no laughing matter. The gentleman laughs, Mr. Chairman. Our covert activity has resulted in the death of 341,000 people, 55,000 children dead. No laughing matter. Amputees by the thousands. No laughing matter. This is serious business here.

My distinguished colleague from California showed pictures of children with one leg, one arm, some with no legs and no arms. This is no laughing matter. I appreciate my opportunity to come here to speak on this issue, make it open.

Mr. Chairman, the focus of this amendment does three things: It requires, first, that the United States not provide covert assistance in support of military or paramilitary operations in Angola. Second, that support should be openly acknowledged. Third, any open support must be requested by the President of the United States and approved by Congress. It is a very radical extreme idea, that a President in a free and open society should have to request military and paramilitary assistance. The Congress of the United States should have the right to approve a very radical and subversive idea. What are we communicating to the other nations in the world who believe that our form of government is magnificent, for the United States to feel that the President and the Congress should not be able to do that? A few people in the dark arrange and frame covert activity?

Mr. Chairman, I did not participate in general debate. I ask my colleagues to indulge me to allow me to make 2 additional comments. One, I want to focus on the role of Angola in the situation, and finally the role of the United States. The Government of Angola has made a number of good will gestures toward the United States in order to improve bilateral relations, foster regional peace, and to bring an end to this brutal 15-to-16-year war. In that regard, Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, I would like to read only in part, from a letter that was sent to the chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence and others, from the President of the People's Republic of Angola, Mr. Dos Santos.

I am certain that you are aware that the Angolan government is an advanced phase of preparation regarding its reform with the following objectives: one, the holding of free elections within the context of a multiparty system; creation of a one-person-one vote electoral system; development of a market economy; encouragement of foreign investment; enacting amendments to our constitution and their submission to debate before their approval with the participation of all the national political elements including UNITA, as long as they demilitarize themselves under the framework of the development of a single national army which has been discussed during the contacts held in Portugal.

Finally, I read from this letter,

My government, in a letter addressed to Congressman Beilenson, chair of the House of Representatives Intelligence Committee, manifests a favorable position regarding the Triple Zero plan so long as the United States and its allies also agree not to supply more military aid to UNITA. This political initiative, which I introduced, will certainly be subjected to international verification.

Mr. Chairman, more than half of the 50,000 Cuban troops stationed in Angola have been sent home ahead of schedule by the government under the terms of the United States brokered peace agreement among Angola, Cuba, and South America. Privatization of Angolan economy has been increased to encourage more United States and Western investment. Currently, the United States, Mr. Chairman, is Angola's No. 1 trading partner. The Government has offered amnesty to UNITA, and has agreed to allow UNITA members to run in elections.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DELLUMS was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate my colleagues' indulgence. FMLA, another rebel movement formerly backed by our CIA members, have accepted amnesty proposals. Mr. Chairman, many now occupy high positions in government and industry in Angola.

Mr. Chairman. let Members now look at the U.S. role. Sadly, this administration, unfortunately, has not seized the initiative to build upon an enhanced opportunity for peace in Angola. Instead, it has escalated arms shipments to UNITA and has actively encouraged the leadership to scuttle peace plans offered last year by the Angolan Government with the support of 18 African leaders and the Organization of African Unity.

Mr. Chairman, the Soviet Union's assistance to Angola has been reduced. The Soviets have publicly agreed to end arms shipments to Angola if the United States would stop funding UNITA. Angola has agreed that if the United States ended aid to UNITA and the Soviet Union cut off arms supplies, that it, Angola, would not go to any other source for arms. Only the United States has not taken the necessary step that would complete this circular movement, Mr. Chairman, and end the arms shipments to both parties.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] in a very dramatic and compassionate way said, "I am not placing blame. Let's stop the arms, stop the killing, and save the children." I underscore his remarks for the purpose of emphasis. Mr. Chairman, while the Angolan Government is attempting to renew peace talks with UNITA, an opportunity for peace in Angola is more possible than at any time in the past. The United States, UNITA's principal backer, has not encouraged them to join multinational negotiations. The United States ignores the fact that the Organization of African Unity opposes UNITA and United States aid to them.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, let me point out and go back and recount what has taken place in human terms. The country has the highest amputee rate in the world. More of the amputees, most of them are women and children, and more than 50,000 children are war orphans, and more than 800,000 civilians face starvation resulting from the combined effect of war and drought. Property damage from the war is estimated at more than $20 billion. Every 4 minutes an Angolan child dies. Constantly, the beleaguered land has the world's highest infant mortality rate. Mr. Chairman, compassion and wisdom cries out for the United States to open up this process. I believe we ought to end it.

We, as a great and mighty nation, ought to be trying to move these people to the table, not trying to spur more death and destruction.

The cold war is over. A new era is in front of us and let us march forward finally.

Wearing my hat as chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, let me assert this. I do not often assert race on the floor casually. Whenever I rise, I do it seriously because I believe it. We would not tolerate this in other countries, thousands of people dying, children, amputees, orphans. We would rise up in righteous indignation, but here blacks are dying.

If peace is good on the other side of the cold war in Eastern Europe, and I believe that, and I want to support it and do, then it is good for Africa and good for Third World countries as well.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I ask my distinguished colleagues, all of you, to take this out of the context of the East-West struggle and see it in human terms, see the devastation that is taking place and join me in adopting this amendment and ending this madness.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I guess the assumption that one should draw from the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from California is that because these are black children, somehow they are unimportant, but I reject that notion altogether. It is the black children that I am worried about, too; but I am worried about Soviet land mines that are left behind. I am worried about the Communists who are pouring in $500 million this year, as against $800 million last year.

You say the cold war is over. There is a hot war going on in Angola right now and one-third of the people are represented by UNITA, Mr. Savimbi, and they are dying, too.

So yes, let us stop the killing. You can always stop killing. Surrender, give up, turn it over to the Soviet Union. They are still there. Their personnel are there. They are in the front lines. They have launched an offensive within the last 2 months and they are getting ready to do another one.

Yes, stop the killing, but stop the killing on their side.

Freedom, democracy, human dignity, human rights, that is what the gentleman has directed his career toward. That is what we want, to support UNITA in Angola.

The gentleman took the floor in 1976, I have his remarks here, and he made predictions that if we would stop helping the UNITA, the Communists would leave. The only reason that the Communists are in there is because we were helping one of these factions.

Well, the gentleman prevailed. The Clark amendment, the Tunney amendment passed and for 10 years we did not send a quarter over there. Did the Soviets leave? They are there today, 15 years later, directing the military operations of the Communist MPLA.

As for pictures of children with their legs off, we can show you films of children starving in the UNITA sections of the country because the Communists will not tell Zambia, they will not tell Namibia that it is all right to send United Nations food in there.

Starving kids look just as bad as children with their limbs off.

Now, covert action, covert activities are somehow unsuitable for a democracy. Well, we have had covert action since the days of Nathan Hale, and let me quote from one of the icons of the Democratic liberal pantheon, Mr. Clark Clifford, who testified before our committee on February 24, 1988. He was saying how terrible, how unworthy it is for a democracy to engage in covert activity.

Reminds me of the time Queen Victoria opposed submarines. It was an un-British way to fight under water.

Well, I asked Mr. Clifford this question:

Let me ask you, I take it when you were in the Truman Administration, you opposed the covert activity that helped save Italy in the post-war years from being taken over by the communists who were pouring millions of dollars in there? Your distaste for covert activity, I take it, was expressed in the Truman Administration?

Mr. CLIFFORD. No. I heartily supported it.

Mr. HYDE. That is one covert activity you supported?

Mr. CLIFFORD. I sure did. And it was very successful.

Mr. HYDE. Then you support the successful ones, but not the unsuccessful ones?

Mr. CLIFFORD. No. That is not the point. Here was a carefully structured plan to meet the communist menace in Italy. They were making an all-out plan to get a communist government in Italy. Careful, lengthy study indicated to us that the proper, intelligent use of funds in Italy might prevent that from occurring.

So we did it. We did it successfully. I would do it today. That is a very useful covert activity.

Mr. HYDE. That is my point. You are not against all covert activity?

Mr. CLIFFORD. Oh, my, no.

So I cite him as an example of somebody who can teach us a lesson on a very successful salvation of Italy from being taken over by the Communists after World War II by use of covert activity.

Now, the amendment that the gentleman is offering is a drastic amendment. It absolutely renounces, regardless of what the future might hold, the possibility of a United States covert action to support the freedom fighters in Angola.

Now, the gentleman rejects that characterization of UNITA as freedom fighters. All UNITA wants is free and fair elections and a cease-fire. That is all they want.

Mr. Savimbi has conceded four things. First, dos Santos stays as President.

Second, the MPLA is legitimate.

Third, no interim government.

Fourth, we will reduce our fighting while you change your constitution from a one-party government to a multiparty government. All we want is a date for elections.

Do you know what dos Santos has conceded? Zip, zero, zilch.

Why, we even had Mr. dos Santos, the President, on a satellite hookup and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] asked him when would he set a date for free and fair elections?

May I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], the gentleman did not get an answer, did he?

Let the record show that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] is shaking his head in the customary "no" symbol.

This amendment cuts off covert aid to people who have been fighting for years for free elections, for a multiparty government and for a cease-fire, and they do not enjoy this war. They do not enjoy starving, but the Communists are still in there. They are in there 15 years after some of you, and I have got it all here, I have got a great quote from the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

(At the request of Mr. DELLUMS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. HYDE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I gratefully accept the gentleman's tender of additional time.

Now, this amendment would eliminate a third option for the United States in Angola, covert action. To help UNITA under this amendment, the President would have to announce it to the world and Congress has to debate and approve it. In the meantime, UNITA starves to death, stands naked against another offensive.

This amendment is the mirror image of one offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] in 1986, September 17, and was defeated 229 to 186.

We have got a House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. We have a Senate Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. Have we got staffs? We have staffs. They are experts. They are skilled. They know their business, and we are designated by Congress and by the law to oversee covert activity, and we talk to them daily, weekly, and monthly on what they are doing and how they are doing it and who is doing it. We are the designated surrogates for the House and for the Senate. That was done because a lot of this information cannot be revealed to the public. Why not? Because other countries are involved occasionally. We cannot do it alone. This is an interdependent world. When we are fighting drugs, when we are fighting terrorists, and we are fighting tyranny, other countries cooperate with us, but they will not if the fact of their cooperation or the extent of their cooperation is made a matter of public record.

So you deny us the opportunity to stand for freedom, free elections, human rights, human dignity in Angola, and it is important.

My God, do you think we want to send our treasury over there? We are already scrambling to try to balance our budget. Should we send money over to a continent far away if we do not care? Do you think we want to establish a new colony over there? No, but we are committed to fighting Communist tyranny, whether it is in Afghanistan or whether it is in Cambodia or whether it is in Angola.

So I suggest to you this is an ill-advised amendment. It is reviving the Clark amendment which we put to bed 5 years ago, which had lasted for 10 years and which did not do what they said it would do, namely, diminish Soviet influence in Angola.

They are still there as we speak. And I hope the gentleman's amendment is rejected.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I certainly do not wish to dominate this debate. There are a number of other people who will be talking.

Let me just first say to my distinguished colleague I choose not to allow this debate to deteriorate into a personality challenge between the gentleman and myself. This is a contest of ideas. I did not quite understand when the gentleman said I used my 15 minutes. I do not mind how long a person takes to debate an issue. My colleague knows full well that I do not speak in the well of this House often. When I do, I try to make my points cleanly.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I personalized the debate because the gentleman is the embodiment of his side of the argument and if he and I can argue it is the same as arguing with the House on this. I am sorry, I mean no disrespect. I have consummate respect for the gentleman.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate keeping it at that level.

Let me make three quick responses. With respect to the Soviet Union's continued existence there, the gentleman knows the record is replete with the fact that the South African Government was shipping arms and continued to ship arms to UNITA.

No. 2, with respect to food, food corridors have been established. The Angolan Government has agreed to the establishment of them.

Finally, I just want to repeat what this amendment does; it says the United States should not provide covert assistance, it says any support should be openly acknowledged and it says any open support must be requested by the President and approved by the Congress of the United States.

So if the gentleman wants to do it, this gentleman is saying do it out in the open and let us debate it, not in a covert manner.

Mr. HYDE. This gentleman would direct the gentleman from California to the staff of the Intelligence Committee for an update, up-to-date information on the subject of starvation in Angola and in the UNITA-held territories.

The gentleman will find, contrary to what he just said, that food is not getting in there, because they cannot get permission from the Dos Santos government. Both Zambia and Namibia will not permit food to go in until they get the OK from Dos Santos. That is the latest information.

I yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. DELLUMS. And I appreciate that.

I think we ought to debate on the issue being asserted. What I said was that food corridors have now been established. In my remarks I said people are starving as a result of drought and hunger. I made that statement openly and asserted that.

So at that point the gentleman and I agree. What I want to end is this covert activity that precludes our capacity to provide support.

Mr. HYDE. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman that that is why people are starving. Drought and hunger have a lot to do with it.

But I would suggest the Communist MPLA government, the government will not permit adjoining governments who do not want to be publicly involved to ship food in. That is a volitional action by the Communist government.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HYDE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. HYDE. As far as covert activity is concerned, covert activity is a necessary tool to be used by any Executive. It has been used since the days of George Washington.

The question is whether it is widely used or abusively used.

I would suggest to the gentleman, trusting Mr. BEILENSON, trusting the committee, trusting the Senate committee—it is bipartisan and in fact overwhelmingly is it dominated by the majority party in our House—we know what we are doing, and I think you can trust us. Otherwise you destroy the availability of the covert option for the President and many times it is most useful and necessary, primarily when other countries do not want their cooperation with us a matter of public record. And to handcuff the President on Angola or anywhere else is just unwise.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank my colleague.

I know that a number of my other colleagues are going to answer you subsequently. Let me raise another point when you mentioned trusting the gentleman from California and trusting the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, that I have great trust in both gentlemen. That is not the issue. I have trust in the members of the committee.

But the other day I voted against a package that was based on summitry which precluded my capacity to participate openly in the process. A number of colleagues on both sides of the aisle joined me in bringing down the whole motion of summitry where a handful of people make deals in the back room. What I am saying is let us not make policy in the back room; do it in the open. Let us, you and I, earn our income out front. I do not question the gentleman's veracity or the gentleman's activity. I am just saying this is a body of 435 people; let us all participate in the process.

Mr. HYDE. Well, the gentleman just does not think covert activity is appropriate for a democracy, and I cite Clark Clifford as someone who thinks it is a great idea, especially when it works. We have used it for years and years and years. And if the gentleman denies us the opportunity to use covert activity, he denies us the cooperation of other countries in the world on terrorism, in narcotics, and in so many other ways. And that would be a self-blinding and deafening of our country at a time when, despite the euphoria that sweeps over central Europe, it is still a very perilous world.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Covert activities in this particular instance is extremely important, I would say to my colleague from California. The fact of the matter is not too long ago—and I alluded to this a few moments ago in my discussion with Mr. DYMALLY—there was an attack from Guido Carnavale on Mavinga. At that particular time it was well known or it became known that UNITA was short on petrol. They were short on gasoline.

I submit to my colleague that may be one of the reasons that attack took place.

Now, if Dr. Savimbi, during these very important negotiations that we hope will end up with a peaceful agreement, during these very important negotiations, if the MPLA perceives they are short of ammunition or short of gasoline or short of any kind of supplies, an attack will take place. Now, that attack did take place on Mavinga and they did carpet bombing from 35,000 feet and thousands of innocent people were killed or maimed. Maybe some of the people in the pictures we saw earlier which Mr. DYMALLY has shown, maybe they were casualties of that conflict.

But the fact of the matter is that it is extremely important that this be covert. If you start telegraphing what we are doing with UNITA, you give the MPLA the upper hand. They know the supply lines, they know the supplies UNITA has if you do this; they know how much weaponry they have, they know when they are short of gasoline. At those particular moments, they will launch an attack as they did on Mavinga.

So I think during these negotiations which we hope will result in a peaceful solution that covert operations is extremely important.

For us to be debating that on the floor of the House would be absolutely insane because then you would tell the MPLA, the Communist government over there, everything that is going on, the kind of supplies that are requested, where we are going to send them. That is something you do not do when a conflict is going on, especially in view of the fact they have been negotiating.

As Mr. HYDE said a moment ago, UNITA has made some serious concessions. They have said that they recognize the Government of Angola, they recognize Dos Santos as the President of Angola, they recognize the Government of Angola as the interim government in the period leading up to elections. Deescalation is something that they will go along with. They are working toward a peaceful settlement. This is exactly the wrong time to be making these changes.

I talked to Jim Baker, I talked to Hank Cohen at the State Department, and they said that the negotiations are moving along at a fairly rapid pace and that we may have an agreement in the not-too-distant future when they will have determined the date for free and fair elections, deescalation of the conflict, and a ceasefire.

I submit to you this is the worst possible time for the United States of America to be considering cutting off aid or going public with what we are doing for UNITA. I think the gentleman from Illinois is right on the money, and I hope he will continue his fight on the Intelligence Committee.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN].

Mr. MCEWEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to emphasize on that particular point the fact that negotiations are taking place at this moment, the fact is, if I may remind the gentleman, due to the fact that we are negotiating this on the floor, some of the people would draw a correlation from the requests of the MPLA to not meet in their fifth negotiating session. They asked 2 days ago to not meet for a temporary period. We do not know for how long.

The world is watching whether or not democracy is going to stand firm. And if there are those who choose to turn our back on what we stood for for these many years and to support the negotiating process and to surrender unilaterally, then it would be absolutely, as you said, be the perfectly wrong moment to take this kind of step when peace is within sight.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to H.R. 5422 offered today by Congressmen DELLUMS, DYMALLY, and myself.

This amendment requires that any U.S. assistance to the UNITA rebels in Angola during fiscal year 1991 be openly debated and approved by the full Congress.

PROCESS, NOT SUBSTANCE

Mr. Chairman, this amendment addresses the process by which U.S. policy in Angola is made. It does not address the substance of that policy.

This amendment is not a vote on U.S. assistance to UNITA. It is a vote on how we will make decisions on that assistance. This amendment neither prevents nor provides U.S. aid to UNITA. Rather, it seeks to ensure that we address this question in the same policy process through which we address other issues of great importance to our foreign policy.

My support for this amendment arises from my concern about the excessive use of secrecy in American foreign policy in recent years. I may differ with the other two sponsors of this amendment on the substance of U.S. assistance to UNITA.

For example, I do not think U.S. support for UNITA should be prohibited. Under certain conditions—especially in the event of continued Soviet military assistance to the Angolan Government or a threat to UNITA's survival—I support assistance to the rebels.

My view, however, and that of my cosponsors is that any U.S. military support for UNITA should be openly requested by the President, openly debated by the American public, and openly approved by Congress.

Members may disagree on whether and how to assist UNITA, but I would hope we can agree that open consideration of this question by the Congress will enhance the prospects for a successful policy.

U.S. POLICY IN ANGOLA IS MADE IN SECRET

Let's be clear about how our policy in Angola has been made for the past 5 years.

The President and a small group of advisers decide what steps to take among themselves. The congressional intelligence committees are simply notified of these decisions. The intelligence committees do not approve a specific line item for Angola, and are not required to. Other Africa specialists in our Government play no role. Outside experts are not consulted. Public debate is squelched. Even Congress has no voice in this policy. It has never had a chance to give it careful review.

Our policy in Angola has been conducted in this elitist, secretive fashion for the past 5 years.

WHY OPEN CONSIDERATION IS NECESSARY

Open consideration of U.S. assistance to UNITA is necessary for three basic reasons:

First, there are major costs and risks when foreign policy is conducted in secret:

Secret foreign policy undermines democratic accountability. In our normal foreign policymaking process, the President proposes initiatives, Congress suggests revisions, the press comments, and the public debates. Rigorous scrutiny refines policies and ensures accountability. When the President keeps a foreign policy operation secret, as he has done in Angola, Congress is bypassed and scrutiny is limited to the intelligence committees. This prevents the broad and open debate that helps correct mistakes and ensure that policies are consistent with American values and interests;

Secrecy restricts policy coordination. A small group of intelligence officials manages the details of policy implementation, and other responsible officials are excluded from decisionmaking. Executive and legislative branch officials, who have experience and expertise, lack the information necessary to perform their jobs and are not able to make a contribution;

Secret foreign policy weakens intelligence analysis. When our intelligence agencies run policy, large amounts of time and energy are diverted from the collection and analysis of intelligence. Objectivity also suffers if policy goals begin to drive facts;

Most importantly, secrecy makes it more difficult to generate and sustain public support for our foreign policies; in the long run, effective foreign policy requires public support. The key to sustained support is an informed and involved Congress.

There is, of course, a role for secret initiatives in our foreign policy. But secret initiatives should supplement publicly enunciated policies; they should never substitute for them. When a secret initiative becomes the core of U.S. policy, as it has in Angola, the risks of failure grow.

Second, U.S. assistance to UNITA is not secret. We should not pretend it is when it is not.

United States aid to UNITA has been discussed openly by Presidents, officials, and the media for several years. Many of its most important features, including its approximate size and the identity of the countries that support it, are widely known. I cannot understand why United States national interests in Angola require continued official secrecy.

If there ever had been a rationale for a secret foreign policy in Angola, it no longer exists. Insistence upon continued official secrecy on United States aid to UNITA suggests a lack of confidence in the policy and an unwillingness to expose it to public debate.

Third, open consideration of UNITA aid is necessary because events in Angola and the world have brought our policy to a crucial juncture.

Much has happened in the 4 years since Congress last took up this issue: Cuban forces have almost withdrawn from Angola; we are working with the Soviet Union to resove regional conflicts, and we have talked about Angola; UNITA and the Angolan Government are discussing a possible political settlement.

These developments raise tough new questions about our policy: What should be our role in what is now a civil war? How do we enhance the prospects for a negotiated settlement? How can we best promote democracy in Angola? What do we know about UNITA's commitment to the values we support? How does our Angola policy affect our relations with the rest of Africa?

These fundamental questions about the course of our policy have been considered in secret, by too few people, for too long. They deserve broad public consideration. They require the input of a wide range of views. To ensure that this occurs, we must bring Angola policy into the normal constitutional process for the making of American foreign policy.

CONCLUSION

Because U.S. assistance to UNITA remains officially secret, Congress is unable openly to debate it and determine its fate. Secret policies are prone to error and lack the kind of accountability that ensures they will be consistent with U.S. interests. An open process produces policies that are better and more likely to receive sustained public support.

If the President believes his course in Angola is correct, he should take his case to the public and to the Congress, for scrutiny and funding. If Congress knowingly and publicly supports military assistance, UNITA will have a better chance of sustained U.S. support based on the commitment of the American people.

I urge you to support this amendment.

So, my colleagues, I urge adoption of this amendment and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to associate myself with the incredibly good remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], my friend. I think he responded to the issue extraordinarily well.

I would also like to say that it has been a pleasure to work over the years with all of the members of the committee, but particularly under the leadership of the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], the ranking minority member, who I think do a great service to this country in working as well together as they do and with all the rest of us as members on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

I might say to the former chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON], that he has raised a good point. The purpose of the amendment may very well be to withhold funds unless openly acknowledged, but then he must also understand that the rationale for not discussing this covert action on the floor, as we are now doing, is primarily because of the sensitivity of the issue, not only to the United States of America and its policies, but to our allies and friends.

If this amendment were to pass, if all future discussion of this covert policy and ultimately perhaps other covert policies were to be discussed on the floor, I think one could anticipate that other allies, other friends who have their own sovereign interests to consider, might well withhold any support of assistance, whether it is for UNITA or any other worthy efforts in the world.

We are in effect reacting to force with counterforce, a concept which is deplored by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], the author of this amendment. In my opinion if that first force is evil, then counterforce is necessary and justified.

It would then seem that it is in the interests of men of good will throughout this world that covert activity be employed, if necessary, so that friends and allies can join forces to hold off that evil force.

Saddam Hussein currently has posed a force for evil in the Middle East, and if not contained, might ultimately pose a threat to the entire Middle East and ultimately to the entire world, so counterforce is indeed often necessary and must be employed.

With respect to Angola, the author of the amendment has asked why are we discussing the funding of aid to UNITA in the name of the cold war when the cold war is over, making this effort a "cold war anachronism."

Nobody told the MPLA that this is an anachronism, but they are still fighting. They promise they will provide free elections, and someday they will provide for an open and free economy, but the time has come to stop promising and start producing.

What we are looking for is a cease-fire in Angola, and we are not getting it. That's not Savimbi's fault.

On June 23, 1989, a cease-fire was tentatively declared. In December of 1989 the MPLA mounted an offensive against UNITA designed to take the strategic town of Mavinga. They took Mavinga and they occupied it for 2 months. Ultimately they were forced by UNITA to withdraw.

If these are people of good will, is this the way they are going to react in the future? We can hardly accept their intentions today or in the future, regardless of what they say, because we can see how they act. We need concrete action. Mr. Savimbi has made any number of concessions. He has recognized Dos Santos as the President of Angola. He has recognized the legitimacy of the current MPLA government. He said UNITA is not insisting on the formation of an interim government prior to elections. He has reduced his demands to only recognizing UNITA as a political entity, and he has asked for only a fixed date for internationally supervised multiparty elections, and yet Dos Santos, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] pointed out, has made no concessions, has not given a date certain for elections, and has not agreed to a cease-fire.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LIVINGSTON was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, the Clark amendment withdrew aid to UNITA for some 10 years. After 10 years of lack of aid, and 10 years of watching this war continue incessantly in Angola, the United States repealed the Clark amendment, and we are back in this picture, preferably behind closed doors, but now openly on the floor.

At a time when the entire world is rejecting communism, the MPLA in Angola promises cease-fires and elections, yet does not produce. They have promised the removal of Cuban troops, but there are still half of the Cuban troops in Angola. Soviet advisers remain in Angola today.

The gentleman who authored this amendment apparently puts this discussion of aid to UNITA on the floor, with the hope that friends and allies of the United States would withdraw their support, so that ultimately there would be no United States aid for UNITA, and with the hope that there would be peace in Angola. But those are false hopes.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is ill-advised for any number of reasons. One, the MPLA only last year launched an offensive, as we have already talked about, after they agreed to a cease-fire! Second, the MPLA has an oil economy. We know what has happened to the price of oil. It has doubled. They have $5 billion in revenue available to them. If we withhold aid to UNITA, obviously UNITA and Savimbi will be at a serious disadvantage.

Third, even though they are ending the cold war in Europe, the Soviets have continued to provide aid and support for the MPLA to the tune of $800 million in 1989 and $500 million in 1990, this year.

The MPLA withholds food shipments and is starving UNITA out. There is rampant famine in Angola. Is it because of the U.S. action? No, it is because of the actions of the Soviet-supported MPLA.

Finally, the MPLA has on one hand a 15-year stockpile of arms, so that even if the Soviets did withhold aid, they still have arms to continue fighting, unless they declare a cease-fire. They should, but they have failed to do so.

Does the war continue simply because we continue aid to UNITA? No, it's because of the MPLA. And I would add that our support for UNITA is not a racist policy, any more than our concern for what is happening in Ireland, Cambodia, or Lebanon, is a racist policy.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Savimbi has made numerous concessions. The MPLA has made none. So I firmly believe that this amendment is ill advised.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, about 4 years ago when we debated this amendment in another place, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] said in the debate at that time, "Any covert action in Angola will be difficult to sustain in the absence of a thorough and frank debate of this issue."

That is what the gentleman said today, but since that time I would remind Members there have been major breakthrough in southern Africa without the full public debate that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] wanted back then, including the independence of Namibia, a timetable for the complete withdrawal of all Cuban troops, and the first face-to-face UNITA-MPLA negotiations to end the civil war.

Mr. Chairman, if it ain't broke, don't fix it.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the accelerated pace of history over the last year has been absolutely astounding. Each passing week something comes up that just amazes all of us.

I am anxious to leave the Chamber right now to go over to the Rayburn Building and meet with the most intelligent, the most forceful, the longest survivor of all of the Communist conquerors of Vietnam. Nguyen Co Thach is over in room 2200 meeting with the MIA-POW Task Force, and in about 12 minutes that meeting will adjourn to go over to the main Foreign Affairs room where Mr. Thach will meet with the whole Committee on Foreign Affairs. We know that they have a warehouse of American remains that they have been deceiving us about for 15 to 17 years now. We hope to resolve it.

Mr. Chairman, communism has brought utter chaos to Vietnam. The reason I bring this up is because Mr. Dos Santos canceled his trip here because he is the last of the Communist dictators who will not concede publicly that communism has failed his people miserably and that his country is in absolute economic decay.

Mr. Chairman, these Communists are the bad guys. The Dos Santos regime in Luanda, the MPLA—they are the bad guys. I remember 15 years ago a Vietnam veteran from Maryland who was at loose ends. He lived an hour's drive from here, Danny Gerhardt, went over to Angola to fight for what he thought were the forces of freedom. He was captured and was executed. The Dos Santos government made his poor parish, a Catholic parish in Maryland, come up with $5,000 of blood money to buy back Danny Gerhardt's riddled body.

Now flash forward 15 years.

Here is a report from Broadcast Africa just a few days ago, October 10.

"A group of MPLA soldiers," and I do not know if this is true or not, but here is the wire service report, "stationed in Cahombo near Menongue in Cuando Cubango Province, has killed a Catholic priest and a congregation member during an armed robbery at the weekend." And they did this killing during Mass.

I quoted earlier during this debate one of the major generic spots by a big corporation that has been running for 2 years now, "freedom is wonderful, freedom is everything." I add to that that freedom is winning. And I cannot understand, why we don't go in for the kill while we can. When you consider all the horrors of communism and the terror and chaos that terrorist groups have brought around the world, from uncovering mass graves of 300,000 people in the Soviet Union that they build apartment buildings on, to incidents like this involving MPLA murders you have to wonder why so many in this Chamber have such a blind spot when it comes to communism. I have great respect for the Black Caucus of this Congress. I do not know one caucus Member that is the son of a multimillionaire, who got here with inherited wealth, as other Members and Senators have. Every one of you in the Black Caucus is a self-made man who fought your way up through life and is afraid of nothing. And yet every time I have asked one of you individually, including the late and much beloved Mickey Leland, "Will you meet with Savimbi?"; The answer was always the same. "Of course." Mickey Leland said it, and when I asked BILL GRAY when he was chairman, "Will you meet with Savimbi?" he said, "Of course." And yet, the Black Caucus has never had this great heroic black leader before them to make his case.

Why? Because of the South African connection. On its surface that seems logical, but none other than the great statesman, Winston Churchill, the greatest of Western civilization maybe, said, when asked why he was making an alliance with the Soviet Union, and he knew ahead of most of us that Stalin's terror was equal or worse than Hitler's, said, "To conquer Herr Hitler I will make a pact with the devil himself." Savimbi and I discussed that very remark. He said "I know it is a racist regime, but I am fighting for my people. That is why I studied guerilla warfare in China and why I will take any port in a storm until I can get rid of the Communist terror in my country."

Here is a letter that I will just read the first lines of from our Secretary of State to our Republican leader. It says, "As you know, I am engaged in active diplomacy aimed at achieving a negotiated settlement. Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and I are seeking a negotiated settlement to the Angolan conflict." A remarkable world, my colleagues. "This is due in no small measure to Moscow's understanding, despite the enormous and continuing Soviet commitment to the Luanda regime, of American resolve on this issue."

Are those not wonderful words for a change, American resolve? Hanging in there, acting like Americans, helping the good guys against the bad guys.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DORNAN of California was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, our Secretary of State, James A. Baker III, concludes:

My view boils down to this: All Savimbi wants is a ceasefire and the ability to compete in fair and free multiparty elections. Some in the MPLA seem willing to move toward this peaceful, democratic approach as well. A vote to amend the Intelligence Committee's Angola provisions is a vote against this democratic solution at the absolutely worst time—and would be a vote for more killing, more stalemate, and more suffering.

I will put the whole text in the RECORD with my remarks. The intervening paragraphs are just as succinct and as powerful.

Here is an article by James P. Gallagher, an analyst and an excellent writer on what has happened in Africa over the last quarter of a century. He says in an article entitled "Africa's Invisible Famine," that "Just a few short years ago, the American public and the national media were calling the Reagan administration daily to come to the aid of the hundreds of thousands of starving people in Ethiopia." Mr. ACKERMAN went there, Mr. WOLF went there, I went there. It was a horrible thing to see. Mickey Leland went there many times.

And what did we do under Ronald Reagan, a great President? We helped a Marxist-Leninist government with a famine that they created. And now Mr. Gallagher makes an excellent case that the MPLA is doing the same thing.

He says:

All indications are that the MPLA is using food as a way to increase its leverage over UNITA. Angola is on the brink of a serious and deadly situation. The callous lack of a response by the MPLA and their continued inaction shows the lengths to which the regime will go to retain power. It is apparent that the MPLA is willing to barter with human life. The world community must respond before thousands more die in this humanitarian crisis.

Again, the body of the article is just as good.

Finally, I close, Mr. Chairman, from an article in the Washington Post, the Washington inside-the beltway Post:

There is light at the end of the tunnel of Angola's 15-year civil war. The government and its UNITA challengers have shredded the country and demonstrated that neither can defeat the other; they are engaged in direct negotiations.

At the end of the article the Post says, "Congress is right to be appalled that this awful war goes on," on into its 16th year, "but a one-sided cutoff expresses only impatience and partiality for one Angolan party," the Communist Party, the world's greatest killers. That was my aside remark. I do not think the Post has gone that far, yet.

"It is not simply that the government in Luanda receives 10 times as much foreign assistance as the insurgents. Nor is it that either Angolan party has proven itself superior in dedication to the national welfare," writes the Post analyst. "Despite its relatively scant dimensions, American aid has served the crucial purpose of reinforcing the military stalemate and making possible negotiations aimed at a political settlement."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. DORNAN of California was allowed to proceed for 30 additional seconds.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, for emphasis I will strike a Traficant pose.

"To pull the plug on a policy that was failing might be understandable. To pull the plug on a southern Africa policy that has succeeded in other aspects and now seems near succeeding in Angola is perverse."

Unfortunately we have to do it in a covert manner. But as with so much that has involved communism over the years, if you get it done covert, leave it alone as long as it gets done, and done legally. If it is not broken, please, do not fix it.

Defeat this amendment.

The text of the letter and articles referred to follow:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington.

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL,
House of Representatives.

DEAR BOB: You soon will be voting on HR 5422, the Intelligence Authorization Bill. As you probably know, several amendments are contemplated which, if enacted, would seriously hinder efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement to the conflict in Angola.

As you know, I am engaged in active diplomacy aimed at achieving a negotiated settlement. Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and I are seeking a negotiated settlement to the Angolan conflict. This is due in no small measure to Moscow's understanding, despite the enormous and continuing Soviet commitment to the Luanda regime, of American resolve on this issue. Likewise, some, but not all, MPLA leaders are beginning to realize that they cannot defeat UNITA militarily and must negotiate a settlement, despite the wishes of hardliners in Luanda who continue to seek a military solution. After four rounds of UNITA-MPLA direct talks facilitated by the Portuguese Government, our policy may be on the verge of success. For his part, Dr. Savimbi has been flexible and reasonable in his negotiating positions. Furthermore, he has been steadfast in his calls for free and fair multi-party elections in which UNITA is free to participate.

I firmly believe that Angola, like other regional conflicts, can be resolved through negotiations, if both sides have the incentive to talk and compromise. Our ongoing program is important to persuading the Angolan Government that a military solution to the conflict is not an option. I urge in the strongest possible way that you continue your solid support for this peace process by not endorsing legislative proposals which, although packaged as "compromises", actually would have the effect of undercutting those in the MPLA who want to negotiate and of strengthening the hand of the MPLA hardliners who want to continue the bloodshed.

Any imposition of conditional language will be taken by hardliners in Luanda as the ray of hope they have been looking for and long predicting. They will argue that the U.S. is preoccupied elsewhere, "short of breath," and willing to pull the rug out from under UNITA—and that there is thus no need for negotiations. This will only lengthen Angola's tragic war.

My view boils down to this: All Savimbi wants is a ceasefire and the ability to compete in fair and free multiparty elections. Some in the MPLA seem willing to move toward this peaceful, democratic approach as well. A vote to amend the Intelligence Committee's Angola provisions is a vote against this democratic solution at the absolutely worst time—and would be a vote for more killing, more stalemate, and more suffering.

Therefore, I ask that you strongly oppose any efforts to amend the Intelligence Authorization Bill with respect to Angola.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. BAKER III.

AFRICA'S INVISIBLE FAMINE

(By James P. Gallagher)

Just a few short years ago, the American public and the national media were calling on the Reagan Administration daily to come to the aid of the hundreds of thousands of starving people in Ethiopia. The Reagan Administration and the Congress responded by becoming the largest donor of relief supplies for the people of that Marxist-Leninist nation.

A similar crisis has again developed elsewhere on the African continent. A famine of comparable severity now threatens the people of Angola. This southwest African nation, just north of newly independent Namibia, has known nothing but war for the past twenty five years. Western relief agencies now estimate that 250,000 people are at "immediate risk" of starvation in southern and central Angola. Who is to blame for this threat to human life? Certainly nature must take credit for three straight years of drought. However, much of the blame for compounding an already disastrous situation can be placed squarely on the Marxist government of Angola and its Soviet and Cuban benefactors.

A brief glance at Angola's troubled history shows that it has had a troubled history over the past twenty years. In the 1970s, Angola served as a battleground for Soviet dreams of expanding their empire through the use of surrogate "national liberation movements." Since 1975, it has been the battleground between the Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA) led by Jonas Savimbi. However, the MPLA appears to be fighting against the tide of history as support for communism and one-party totalitarianism throughout the world is waning.

In a bold attempt to help bring about a solution to this humanitarian crisis and bring food to the starving on both sides of the conflict, UNITA leader Jonas Savimbi proposed the establishment of so-called "corridors of peace." These corridors would be safe routes through which humanitarian assistance could be provided to the people in both UNITA and MPLA-held territories. The State Department embraced the proposal, but it was rejected by the MPLA. The MPLA charged that it was unacceptable for the U.S. to be involved in any humanitarian relief program because it was possible for U.S. to send lethal aid with such supplies. That outrageous charge was made in a July 2 letter to Members of Congress from the MPLA's paid lobbyist in Washington. It was never retracted and was later expanded upon with charges from the same lobbyist that the U.S. had used previous relief programs to funnel arms to rebels in Ethopia and Sudan within shipments or relief supplies.

The time has passed for diplomatic maneuvering. Officials of the Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance (OFDA) estimated just two months ago that 782,000 people in both UNITA and MPLA territory face the threat of starvation. An additional 250,000 are at "immediate risk," two-thirds of which are in UNITA territory. As the State Department reported earlier this year after sending a Needs Assessment Team to southeastern Angola, "humanitarian assistance can be removed from political disagreements in times of great need." This crisis in Angola presents an opportunity for the U.S. to rise above the fray to provide the necessary assistance.

As recently as early September of this year, officials OFDA estimated between 3,800 and 10,000 deaths had already occured in southern Angola. This confirms the need and urgency for the United States to take unilateral action to resolve this crisis. To date, little has done by the United Nations to facilitate the movement of any emergency food aid to the starving in Angola. The risk of mass starvation is real and even the Namibian government has estimated that upwards of 1.5 million Angolans face severe food shortages.

All indications are that the MPLA is using food as a way to increase its leverage over UNITA. Angola is on the brink of a serious and deadly situation. The callous lack of a response by the MPLA and their continued inaction shows the lengths to which the regime will go to retain power. It is apparent that the MPLA is willing to barter with human life. The world community must respond before thousands more die in this humanitarian crisis.

MPLA ALLEGEDLY MURDERS PRIEST AT CAHOMBO

Jamba, Wednesday, October 10—[dateline as received] A group of MPLA [Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola] soldiers stationed in Cahombo, near Menongue, in Cuando Cubango Province, has killed a Catholic priest and a congregation member during an armed robbery on the weekend.

Informed sources, among them eye-witnesses in the Cuando Cubango provincial capital, said the victims, Father Firmino and Jone Mendes, were killed in their church during Sunday mass in Chikimbili village.

It was not immediately known why MPLA troops have targetted members of the religion. However, relations between the regime and Catholic Church have worsened ever since the pastoral letter published last November which called for a ceasefire and multi-party elections aimed at peace in Angola which angered the MPLA regime.

Meanwhile, an elderly woman identified as Domingas Vunda of Camongua village was reported killed by another group of MPLA soldiers stationed at Cambache two days when she complained to the troops about the robbing of her personal property, including chickens at her home.

THE ANGOLA DEBATE

There is light at the end of the tunnel of Angola's 15-year civil war. The government and its UNITA challengers have shredded the country and demonstrated that either can defeat the other; they are engaged in direct negotiations. Their respective Soviet and American supporters are working in their fashions to turn them toward a ceasefire and political settlement in the coming months.

If this works, it will follow from a line of Reagan administration policy continued by President Bush. One early result was South Africa's delivery of independence to Namibia. A Second was the departure—completed in Namibia, close in Angola—of Communist Cuba's expeditionary forces. The third would be a settlement in Angola. There American policy has sought not just to move out the Cubans but also to encourage Angolan national reconciliation and to persuade the Soviets that the price of their continued support for an unrepresentative local government is too high.

It is this last segment of American policy in Angola—raising the price to Moscow—that is now being debated in Congress. Everyone wants the Cubans to go home. Everybody wants a political settlement. But the Kremlin, disturbingly slow to apply its "new political thinking" in Angola, has kept immense aid flowing; its annual support, though down perhaps by a billion dollars from the 1987 peak, is put at $500 million. Meanwhile, some in Congress are opposed to or tired of sustaining Jonas Savimbi's UNITA, for which the Bush administration reportedly seeks $60 million. Voices in Congress demand that American aid be phased down or out. Some would use Rube Goldberg-type legislative instructions to try to arrange Soviet reciprocity, and some would simply end the aid.

Congress is right to be appalled that this awful war goes on. But a one-sided cutoff expresses only impatience and partiality for one Angolan party. It is not simply that the government in Luanda receives 10 times as much foreign assistance as the insurgents. Nor is it that either Angolan party has proven itself superior in dedication to the national welfare. Despite its relatively scant dimensions, American aid has served the crucial purpose of reinforcing the military stalemate and making possible negotiation aimed at a political settlement. To pull the plug on a policy that was failing might be understandable. To pull the plug on a southern Africa policy that has succeeded in other aspects and now seems near succeeding in Angola is perverse.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset let me express my appreciation to the members of the Intelligence Committee on both sides of the aisle. This is one of the finest committees in the House. It also has one of the finest staffs in the House. I served on the Intelligence Committee for 6 years; 2 years as chairman. Not only did I chair the full committee but I also chaired the Subcommittee on Program and Budget. There were numerous programs, covert and otherwise, that came under my purview.

I fully appreciate the need and requirement for secrecy and fully understand that there are certain programs which must be kept covert. But, this is not such a case. When a program has gone on for this long and is openly acknowledged, then it is time that we let the sun set on it. Our Angola policy should be openly debated in the Congress.

Also, this is not an anti-UNITA amendment. It is simply an amendment to make overt what is already acknowledged as an open secret—the fact that the United States has provided, and continues to provide, covert assistance to Jonas Savimbi's UNITA forces. In fact, President Reagan acknowledged such a covert program publicly in November 1985.

Mr. Savimbi was in town last week and told reporters that President Bush promised continued support for the rebel movement until a cease-fire is in place and a date set for elections.

A ceasefire in Angola, to put an end to the needless and senseless killing, and free and fair elections are both goals which everyone supports. The question is, how do we get there? The administration believes that we should continue to provide covert assistance to Savimbi. I believe, however, that 5 years of covert aid is enough and that if UNITA's cause is to ensure multiparty democracy in Angola and that is in the national security interest of the United States, then this matter should be openly debated in Congress.

Perhaps a program of covert assistance could have been justified 5 years ago.

There were over 50,000 Cuban troops in Angola then. Today, they are withdrawing.

The United States-Soviet superpower relationship was then confrontational. Today, it is one of cooperation. Secretary of State Baker and Foreign Minister Shevardnadze have been meeting frequently to end the surrogate vestiges of the cold war.

Savimbi was perhaps not well known then. Today, he is represented by Black, Manafort.

South Africa was actively involved in assisting Savimbi then but today, they have supposedly ceased such assistance as a result of the New York accords.

Five years ago, there were no peace talks but today, the contesting parties are close to reaching an agreement.

Clearly, the situation has changed significantly. I believe our Government's position in discussions with the Soviets would be much stronger if this were an overt program supported by the American people and the Congress.

This amendment simply says that if this is a matter important to the national security interest of our Nation, then we, the people, all the Members of the House of Representatives, not just those who sit on the Intelligence Committee, ought to be able to judge it on its merits. If the administration believes so strongly in its case, then it should be able to enunciate a position that will gain support and put the entire weight of our country on UNITA's side if that is the way the people should decide.

The administration's argument is that we have come so far and we are so close to achieving a peaceful solution, that with negotiations underway, terminating covert assistance would be pulling the plug on Savimbi and his UNITA fighters. We are not asking in this amendment to pull the plug; we are simply asking that if the administration believes that it has a good case—and I think many believe that it does—then they should be willing to make that case openly and not to continue a covert program that is for all intents and purposes overt. When the former President acknowledges it and the current President endorses it there is no plausibility of denial. Let's be open and honest. I urge you to support this amendment.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOKES. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to join with my colleague in his response.

He was the distinguished chairman of this committee when I came on this committee. He did an outstanding job.

I take my responsibilities very seriously as a member of the Intelligence Committee. I do my best not to tell anybody anything about the activities of the committee. This program has disturbed me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] has expired.

(At the request of Mr. GLICKMAN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. STOKES was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, this program has disturbed me, because others outside of the committee seem to know more about it than I do.

The number of times that I am approached by people working for Mr. Savimbi and others relating to me information which seems to be the kind of information I would be given as a member of the Intelligence Committee, information that I personally would not transmit to anybody else, gets transmitted to me by people who are being paid by parties to the action down there. That is a perfectly legitimate thing to do, but it seems to me to be a highly inappropriate thing to do when we are talking about an activity which is not legally out in the open.

It has always troubled me, and it has caused me to believe that whoever is doing this is not doing this consistent with my responsibilities as a member of the Intelligence Committee which is supposed to have, as part of its function, us keeping our mouths shut on these matters.

So I think it has made me believe all the more that the whole issue of Angola is one that deserves to be brought out in the open. If people are being paid to represent parties to the action there and do it and filing the documents with the appropriate Government parties of the United States, if people are telling me what they think I ought to do as a member of the Intelligence Committee in a lobbying type of capacity, again, a legitimate thing for them to be doing, it is particularly troubling to me that the program should be kept in a secret type of fashion.

For that reason, I intend to support this particular amendment.

Mr. STOKES. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

I can certainly share in his frustrations, having experienced some of the same while I chaired the Intelligence Committee of the House.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let me see, I would like to recap.

I do not know that everybody is for covert action under every circumstance, but I gather, generally speaking, that it is recognized that covert action by a government, and our Government in particular, seems to be essential to the accomplishment of certain objectives around the world. At least, I have not heard any speaker say anything to the contrary yet, although some people may have that opinion.

This discussion is not about covert action. Look at the history of this whole question on Angola; off again, on again, and we are now at the point where we are having discussions, finally, on a possibility of the two superpowers supporting a regional settlement. We know that one superpower by a factor of at least 10 and maybe larger has been supplying one side and the United States has been supplying the other side. There has been no secret about it; as a matter of fact, the author of this amendment probably has done a favor to the world and to the United States and certainly with regard to Angola and covert action, because the policy has been debated all afternoon and will continue to be debated.

That is what the issue is all about. The issue is whether or not you are going to continue aid to Angola, at least as far as the United States Government is concerned.

The procedural maneuvering that goes with that is all right, but I asked myself again, why now? Well, we are a little late in the session. The fiscal year has already started, and this bill is a legitimate bill under which you could raise this issue.

But then I began thinking of the wording of the amendment. Why is the wording such? Well, it says if the President feels so strongly about this, let him step up and be counted on the floor of the House. If the amendment passes, the President will have to come down with a supplemental of some kind. He will have to come to the committees. We would then have another public debate.

As a result of the debate today the only thing that we have not found out is exactly how much money is involved, exactly what kind of equipment is involved and just exactly when is it going.

Any Member who wants to know that, I submit, can find out, but those are the only matters that have not been debated.

Well, what happens next? The supplemental request then goes to the appropriate committee, and we will have to work on it, and then it will have to come to the floor of the House.

But the thing is we will, hopefully, leave here in a few days or maybe on election eve. I have sent for my absentee ballot, by the way. But maybe we are going to leave. Well, that means we cannot consider it until the next session of Congress.

Then I got to thinking, what is so important about November, December, January, February, and March. I will leave that to your judgment.

Yes, we can have another public debate. We can even have it resubmitted to the Congress with the specifics spelled out so that anybody could know everything about what is going on.

The policy issue will not be any different in March than it is this afternoon. You want aid to go, or you do not want aid to go; and you have a reason for wanting it to go, and you have a reason for wanting it not to go. So you can take your pick.

I do not want to impugn anybody's motives. My sincerity is equal to anybody else's in this room. I take no back seat to anybody's logic.

I just say you draw your own conclusion.

We are in the middle of negotiations. The administration, with relatively little amount of military support, on a comparative basis and in a short period of time, has brought the parties closer than they were.

We all have the sense to know that anybody who is in the field, and if you are negotiating, would like to be in a better position, but if you are at a disadvantage of 12 to 1 or 15 to 1 in terms of armaments, you really do not have much chance particularly, if you only have one-third of the country in your possession and your people are starving.

So you ask yourself, I am in a negotiating posture, but am I really stronger than the other guy? And the answer is yes, if you are the Government. And am I in a better position to dictate the terms of what is going to happen in the future? and the answer is yes, and, you know, I do not like that. I believe in fair play.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] has expired.

(At the request of Mr. HYDE, and by unanimous consent, Mr. FASCELL was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. FASCELL. Let me say this, I believe we should have our politics on top of the table. I have advocated that from the very beginning. But I also have supported oversight.

One of the first bills I introduced when I came here 35 years ago was to have a joint committee on intelligence.

□ 1710

Because there was absolutely no oversight by Congress, I supported the gentleman from Illinois in the establishment of a joint committee sometime ago. It is too late now. We have two committees. It may be a long time before we can unify it into a single committee, but we have one thing. We have oversight.

We have distinguished Members of Congress on the committee, from all political spectrums. There the issues are raised. They have the right to speak. They do speak. They offer amendments. The policy is debated. There are very few countries in the world where this opportunity exists. Any citizen listening, any citizen watching, can make up his own mind about the policy.

I am not saying that we have a perfect policy in the United States. We do participate in covert action, to do what? To work for an independent Africa, with sovereign countries, a policy which the United States has consistently followed for 35 or 40 years. And with Africa today, despite the chagrin and the anger of our allies, the British, the French, the Italians, the Portuguese, and the Germans, it has been United States policy that has helped make it possible for African countries to reach this. Let people support their own democracy and keep dynasties, literally dynasties, out of Africa, running Africa. Leave Africa for the Africans. That is what U.S. policy has done. This is U.S. policy.

Let me say this in conclusion. Be a little patient.

(On request of Mr. DELLUMS and by unanimous consent, Mr. FASCELL was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FASCELL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. It is with some grave misgivings that I rise for this question, because I consider the gentleman in the well my friend.

Mr. FASCELL. Well, it is mutual.

Mr. DELLUMS. I would like for the gentleman to explain to me, and I wrote down his remarks, the gentleman said, "I don't impugn anyone's integrity, but you draw your own conclusions," I would like the gentleman to explain that.

Mr. FASCELL. I intend that you should draw your own conclusions from the facts, not on the people who are involved. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. DELLUMS. The gentleman is not suggesting in any way that the authors of the amendment are trying to play some tricky game?

Mr. FASCELL. No, no, absolutely not.

Mr. DELLUMS. There were some Members who heard the gentleman in the well differently.

Mr. FASCELL. If it drew that inference I apologize for that. I did not mean that at all.

What I am saying is, the facts are thus, and Members should draw their own conclusions based on two opposite positions that are presented with deep sincerity.

I thank the gentleman from California for calling that out, because I would not want to offend anyone, and meant no disrespect to anyone.

Mr. DELLUMS. I would say in conclusion that yes, I believe this covert policy should become overt, and yes, I do believe that if it became overt that it could not be sustained in the public eye. I believe that, and I have asserted that. I am not trying to hide.

Mr. FASCELL. I understand that. I understand that, and that is not the purpose of your amendment. The purpose of your amendment is to have it debated on the House floor, openly. All I said is, that is what we have been doing for about 2 hours, and I am willing to do it more. I am willing to get specific. I am willing to find out what the differential is between what we are doing and what the other guy is doing. I am willing to get in specific weapons systems. I am willing to get into the body counts. I am willing to get into the times of delivery. I am willing to get into any of this.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to the strike the requisite member of words.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly rise to salute the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for his eloquent argument against this amendment, which is before Members. The bottom line is that if we were to eliminate the covert aspect, the details of this activity of ours, our allies simply would not let Members operate in support of UNITA.

Therefore, the effect for that reason, as well as the reasons given by the distinguished chairman of the committee, the effect would be of killing the program, killing the support of UNITA against the Marxist government of Angola.

I certainly want to compliment the remarks of my friends on the left who eloquently spelled out the cause for peace in Angola, and who spelled out the horrors of war. They certainly were accurately portrayed.

I would simply say, tell it to dos Santos. Tell it to the Marxist government. Tell it to those who were making war on UNITA. UNITA, those patriots who are fighting for freedom in their own country.

Yes, we have heard it said here today that the world is rushing toward democracy. My friends on the left tell Members such, and I agree. Sadly, that is not the case in Marxist Angola.

Just a few days ago, the Luanda Domestic Service, the wire service, had a story in which it said, "In Luanda yesterday, Deputy Foreign Minister Venancio de Moura denounced UNITA's" union and their call for "U.S. backed idea of establishing a multiparty system in Angola." Just a few days ago, the Government, the Marxist government of Angola, came out once again against multiparty elections.

So who are we kidding? It is UNITA that is calling for free elections. It is the Marxist government of Angola which is opposing those very free elections, and indeed just 2 days ago the Marxist government canceled the sixth round of the peace talks with UNITA, and it is obvious that they want to see what we do here on the floor today.

So the world might be rushing toward democracy, but the evidence is overwhelming that the Marxist government in Angola is not rushing towards democracy. It is UNITA. It is Jonah Savimbi and his freedom fighters who have, time and time again, called for free elections. I, for the life of me, cannot understand why my friends on the left do not support free elections, do not support democracy, why my friends on the left rather would see Members pull the plug on the freedom fighters so the Marxist government in Angola can prevail and, indeed, that would be the result. That would be the result of our stopping our support for UNITA. The result would be that we would be propping up a Marxist government, one of the last Marxist governments in the world. I say we should not do that, and I say we should oppose this amendment. We should defeat it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a couple of things in response to what some of the other speakers have said.

It has not occurred to any Member, nor has it been discussed, and appropriately so, because we cannot discuss it, but we are handicapped in here in an open forum discussing a covert activity with any degree of accuracy or freedom, if we are not to betray the rules of the House and the requirement that we keep these things secret.

However, I just ask Members to fantasize for a moment and imagine a continent where people are landlocked who are fighting for their lives, and we have to get food into them, and weapons into them, but they have to cross other countries to do it. Now, those other countries may be willing to cooperate, but they do not want to be publicly identified. How do we discuss that in an open forum? How do we talk about the reality and the reasonableness of other countries assisting in a covert activity, but they do not want their assistance to be made public? We cannot do it. That is the problem with this issue right here.

Yes, it is an open secret, but if we confirm the accuracy of that as some Members have done, then I think again we are betraying our trust.

Lastly, I am increasingly wondering why we have a Committee on Intelligence. What do we spend the hours up there for, going behind closed doors and pretending what we are doing is important or secret, if it really is not? They do not need Members any more, and Mr. Chairman, I suggest we get together when this bill is through and review whether we need a committee.

See, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] and his friends over there do not think we need a Committee on Intelligence. One of the gentleman's friends was mad because there was laughter over here. I am overjoyed that the gentleman is giving me his thumb down, because he is indicating what some think of the Committee on Intelligence.

I hope that is not lost on your colleagues over there.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCURDY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, in the rush to get out of the well and answer some questions, I left something unsaid and undone. I left undone something I should have said.

There are 15 or 22 undeclared wars around the world, depending on who you want to believe. The United States may be in all of them. The United States may be in none of them. I have no way of knowing. That is a function of the Intelligence Committee to find out.

I also have no trouble in debating the issue as to whether or not our politics ought to be on top of the table and debated in the normal course of a Foreign Affairs authorization or some kind of authorization bill; but the point I tried to make is that policy debate is going on right now. The detailed debate can take place some other time. Therefore, I do not think this amendment is necessary. That is the point I was trying to make. We ought not to support this amendment, and I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCURDY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think it is extremely important that one point be made that has not yet been made in the debate, and that is this. When the attack on Mavinga took place, Dr. Savimbi and his people contacted members of the Intelligence Committee and members of the Foreign Affairs Committee telling us that he was out of gasoline supplies and that if he did not get emergency gasoline supplies, the possibility was that not only would Mavinga fall, but they would be moving on Damba, the headquarters of UNITA, and they could lose the war.

If this amendment had been in place at that time and we had to come to the floor and debate additional supplies for Dr. Savimbi, they would have lost the war and freedom would have been lost in Angola for the foreseeable future; so I think it is extremely important if we want to make sure in cases of emergency that the Intelligence community has the latitude to send emergency supplies to help people, like our friend, Dr. Savimbi, that this amendment be defeated.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendments which are offered today regarding United States policy toward Angola.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Intelligence Committee, I share the dismay that some of us have as members of the committee with the process by which we are operating under today. It is probably the members of this committee who are more constrained in this debate than anyone. We feel as members of this committee when we are appointed that we uphold our oath of secrecy and that we work to protect the interests of this body and that we provide effective oversight on issues of foreign policy. It is difficult for us to openly debate some of the issues that are before us.

As a matter of fact, it is interesting and somewhat ironic that the authors solely by offering this amendment have achieved the very purpose of the amendment itself, and perhaps we do not even need to vote on it because we have had such an open debate here today.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose these amendments because I share with those who offer them a desire to see a permanent settlement to that country's civil war. But I believe that the ideas which these amendments embody, however sincerely held by those who present them, will not encourage the negotiation process that is currently under way between UNITA and the Government of Angola. On the contrary, I respectfully urge my colleagues to restrain their enthusiasm for congressional micromanagement of foreign policy and think about the fundamental point which we must consider: Will a disruption in the United States support for the Angolan resistance, UNITA, help end the war and bring democracy to Angola, or will such a disruption merely prolong that country's misery and agony?

I believe that if the House adopts these amendments, we can expect this conflict to continue, perhaps indefinitely.

Let me explain why by first addressing the substance of the Dellums-Dymally-Hamilton amendment, which proposes to force our policy from its current covert status to one where its most sensitive details would be revealed to those who do not share our values or our interests in this country.

I agree with the views of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON]. I served under him as chairman of the committee. I agree with him that while covert operations are sometimes a useful tool of our foreign policy, they should not become a substitute for publicly enunciated objectives.

But as he well knows, there are a number of considerations which must be taken into account before we open our intelligence operations to full public debate. Among these are our dealings with other foreign leaders, the personal safety of our intelligence sources, and the very credibility of this country to craft a policy and carry it to a successful conclusion.

We must also consider the nature of the regime against which an intelligence operation is mounted. In the case of Angola, we find an authoritarian regime which still relies on the presence of some 15,000 Cuban troops and almost $800 million in Soviet military aid to maintain power.

These factors and others, in my view, preclude us from bringing this policy out into the open at this particular time and warrant the rejection of the Dellum-Dymally-Hamilton amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I also appreciate what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] is trying to accomplish with his amendment. I share his desire to encourage the negotiating process. But I must argue that the issue is not quite as complicated as his amendment, which now runs over 10 pages, would indicate. If the objective of United States policy is to promote a solution to the Angolan conflict through democratic elections, and UNITA has been demanding multiparty elections for almost 15 years, why would we string up all of this legislative barbed wire around UNITA at this critical moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MCCURDY was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is clear where the focus of energies should be directed. Once the Government of Angola and UNITA agree to a specific time table for elections as part of a comprehensive settlement, I am confident that UNITA will sign a verifiable ceasefire and the rationale for this program will change dramatically.

Yet it is my understanding that during a recent conversation via satellite with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], the President of Angola twice refused to give him even the most general time table for when elections might take place.

Despite such obstacles there is reason to be optimistic that an agreement can be reached. UNITA and the MPLA have held four rounds of negotiations, and some progress has been made. Further talks are scheduled and hopefully, with the active participation of the United States and Soviet Union, we can encourage this process further.

But if the House adopts the amendments offered today, we will demonstrate a lack of resolve, give the hardliners in the MPLA the glimmer of hope they have long wanted, and undermine those who are promoting negotiations.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, concern has been expressed by some about alleged human rights abuses on the part of UNITA. The Intelligence Committee has reviewed these charges, and they have not been substantiated by independent observers. But because the question continues to be raised, I believe that UNITA must do more to assure us that its forces are respectful of human rights.

It is worth noting, however, that UNITA has invited Freedom House, Amnesty International, and Africa Watch, among others, to come to its territory and investigate these charges. UNITA has also allowed the Red Cross to inspect its prisoner-of-war camps. It is my understanding that the MPLA, unfortunately, has always refused these same organizations permission to enter its territory to conduct a review of its human rights practices, and it has not allowed the Red Cross to inspect its POW camps.

But if anyone should have the right to review and pass judgment on these allegations it is the people of Angola. Let them decide at the ballot box if they trust UNITA, the MPLA, or some other party with the powers of government. That is why we should maintain our current policy until firm arrangements for free and fair elections are agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote against these amendments not because we should support UNITA as a political party or Jonas Savimbi as its leader. I do so because we should support a political process, just as we have done in Poland, Nicaragua, Namibia, and South Africa, which will culminate in democratic elections for Angola. This is the best way, indeed the only way, to end this conflict. What Oscar Arias said of Central America holds true for Southern Africa: Without democracy, there can be no peace. And this, in my view, requires that we continue our support to UNITA in its present form at this time.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCURDY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SKELTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I compliment the gentleman from Oklahoma on his statement and his position on this amendment. I think that this amendment is probably a good example of unanticipated consequences, should it pass. What would actually happen would be that this amendment would effectively end the aid program to UNITA until our President has openly requested the aid and has gone through the congressional process, which might end up March, April, May of next year and really put an end to the negotiations which I believe are underway right now.

I also agree with the gentleman that American policy in Africa has been successful. Southern Africa, for instance, Namibia is independent, the Cubans have started going home. This is no small thing. This is a result of our policy there.

I think what we should do is continue down the same track, down the same road, and we will reap the benefits and have what the gentleman suggests, open, free, and fair elections in Angola.

Mr. McCURDY. I thank the gentleman.

Just one last point. I received a letter from the National Security Advisor to the President in response to a letter that I had written expressing concern about the situation in Angola and urging the President to coordinate more closely with the Soviet Union in order to promote a settlement because I believe a settlement and a cease-fire is important.

I would just like to quote if I could from the response from the National Security Advisor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MCCURDY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. McCURDY. The security adviser wrote:

I am pleased to inform you that our cooperation with the Soviets on this issue has been improving steadily. There have been a number of useful discussions on this subject of late, and we plan for that pattern to continue. As you know, at the recent round of talks between the MPLA and UNITA in Lisbon there were delegations from both the U.S. and USSR actively in touch with both sides and with the Portuguese who are serving as mediators. This practice will continue in the future.

It is in that context that I want to emphasize the need for the U.S. to stay the course right now on the commitments we have made on Angola, including those to Jonas Savimbi and UNITA. We may be nearing the end of the Angolan civil war. However, if we are to get the right outcome, it is important that we not change signals at this crucial moment in the process. The MPLA must have no doubt about the fact that a negotiated settlement provides the only appropriate road to the future.

I would ask you to bear these thoughts in mind as the Congress considers the Angola issue in the days ahead.

Sincerely,

BRENT SCOWCROFT.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I will not take the full 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I spoke at length earlier this afternoon in general debate on the bill itself about the propriety and the wisdom of debating and voting publicly on major public policy and foreign policy questions such as this. So I will just add a very brief comment on this particular matter if I may.

I simply want to reiterate my agreement with the premise on which this amendment is based that United States policy toward Angola should not be determined in secret. Four years ago, I joined Mr. HAMILTON, then chairman of our Intelligence Committee, in an unsuccessful attempt to require that our Angolan policy be openly debated. During that effort, I noted that it was the Reagan administration which had removed the cloak of covertness from its Angolan policy, while at the same time insisting that the policy be funded with secret funds.

In my judgment, there are few practices which place the continued availability of covert action as a foreign policy tool at greater risk, than publicly proclaiming the existence of a policy for political purposes on the one hand, while on the other maintaining that the policy should be funded in secret. That was true 4 years ago with respect to Angola, and I believe it is true today.

The result of attempting to have it both ways on a covert program is that it puts the members of the House in general, and of the Intelligence Committee in particular, in a terrible bind. We should not be asked to support policies which are treated in one way for public consumption, and in another way for consideration by Congress.

I support treating the issue of assistance to UNITA in a consistent manner. If it is to be the publicly stated objective of our Government that U.S. support for UNITA is to be steadfast, as President Bush declared when Jonas Savimbi recently visited the White House, then I think it follows that any funds necessary to pursue that objective should be provided after public debate. The amendment now under consideration will ensure an open debate on United States policy toward Angola, and for that reason I intend to vote for it.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that the House know that the position of the distinguished chairman is not necessarily the position of the committee and he is not necessarily speaking and reflecting the position of the committee.

Mr. BEILENSON. The gentleman is absolutely correct. This gentleman is only speaking for himself.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I hope to not take the entire 5 minutes.

Let me associate myself with the very good remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY]. But I do not want to just take a second here to do something from rote or something from a prepared text because as some of my friends on the Democrat side know, including Mr. WOLPE, I take this issue very, very seriously. It was not without a great amount of study that I have decided to oppose the restrictions on United States efforts to resolve this problem in Angola.

Let me tell you what I have been doing in the last year, about the last year—the last really 2 years. It was sometime ago that I went to Mickey Leland and asked him if he would work with me to establish a caucus on Africa.

Before Mickey's death he had agreed to do that. In fact, we were in the process of lining people up who would participate in a caucus for the purpose of getting people in Congress to understand the problems in Africa.

Since that time I have been involved in writing a letter—being involved in discussions, I cannot remember whether I wrote a letter or not, but I urged the administration to ask the President of the Congo to come to Washington to be honored for his work to try to resolve this problem in Angola.

Subsequent to those efforts that I made along with several others, the President of the Congo was in fact invited to Washington, where he was honored at a state dinner which I had the great privilege to attend. It was done because we wanted to recognize his brave, courageous efforts to try to resolve this very serious problem in Africa.

I also, by the way, just signed a letter the other day that urged Members to attend the telebriefing between President Dos Santos and Members of Congress.

I must tell you that is not an easy thing to do as a Member some time of the conservative party because here I was saying, "Let us hear what Dos Santos has to say."

Now, I think what is happening or what has happened in Angola is it has been caught up in an East-West confrontation. I think in my own mind I am not convinced that what keeps us from resolving this problem is the East-West confrontation. I am not certain about this, but sometimes I suspect that the problem that we have here is a matter of one group of people who would like to have control battling another group of people who presently have control.

Now, it happens that we are on the side of Mr. Savimbi because they are representing elections, multiparty elections, things that we share and that we believe in here. The other side happens to be supported by the Soviets.

Now, Mr. Dos Santos told me when I was in Angola in a meeting with him that he wanted to open the Government, he wanted to have free enterprise, he wanted all of these things all of us were eager to hear. None of that has been forthcoming really and I am disappointed in that. But I sat down with Mr. HYDE, I sat down with people from the State Department to honestly ask them what we can do to push forward the process to end this conflict.

You see, I did go to the villages, where I saw people who were pulled around in wagons because they had no legs, their stumps and the rest of their bodies were placed on little wagons and pulled by somebody who had also had a limb blown off or maybe both arms.

I saw many, many people, innocent people in Angola, who have been caught in the middle of this conflict. And I want to see it ended. I have worked aggressively within my own party and with my friends on the other side of this aisle to try to get this conflict resolved quickly so that the people of Angola will not continue to die.

Mr. Chairman, do my colleagues know what it comes down to? How do we most quickly resolve this conflict? The gentlemen from California [Mr. DELLUMS and Mr. DYMALLY] and others on that side believe the way to get it done is for the United States to take a certain set of actions.

Let me tell my colleagues something. There is no one who loves life more than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]. He has fought for it all of his career, and he has taken a lot of hits for some of the things that he has done. I say to my colleagues, "Mr. HYDE wants to see an end to this conflict as much as you do."

Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of how we honestly, intellectually feel we will get it resolved.

As my colleagues know, what gave me good reason for optimism, great reason for optimism, was when Secretary Baker went in his last meetings and talked to Shevardnadze about winding down this and ending this conflict in Angola.

Now look. I do not want this conflict to continue on. We have resolved so many other East-West confrontations throughout the world. This continued East-West confrontation continues to result in a lot of people, innocent people over there, being maimed or being killed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. KASICH was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I personally believe that Secretary Baker and Secretary Shevardnadze are truly interested in ending this, and, if the United States is to move unilaterally, unilaterally, which gives incentives to those who were presently in power to hold out, I believe in my mind we are hurting the solution in Angola, and the conflict will be continued.

Mr. Chairman, I think about Nicaragua, and I think about so many other places in the world, in Afghanistan, where we have had these kinds of debates, and, as my colleagues know, it always has come down to where we have stood tough and we have said to the other people that we are ready to negotiate, we are ready to have a cease-fire, we are ready to have elections. It has worked in other places in the world, and it can work here also.

However, Mr. Chairman, I want to tell my colleagues from the bottom of my heart that I want to see this conflict ended. It is clearly now a question of how we get it done, and that is why I have reached out, taken some steps that maybe other people would not take because of my concern for what is happening in that region.

But I happen to believe at this point in time, because it is in the best interest of ending this conflict in Angola, not to enact the legislative barbed wire, not to arm or give incentives to one side over the other, but let us let Shevardnadze and let us let Baker sit in their meetings and get this darned thing resolved once and for all, and I think the best way to approach that right now is not to add the restriction.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

Mr. Chairman, colleagues, I rise to speak in the strongest possible terms in support of the amendment that has been offered by the gentlemen from California [Mr. DELLUMS and Mr. DYMALLY], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON], that requires that any further assistance to UNITA be openly requested by the administration and openly decided by the Members of this Congress. I have enormous respect for those who have taken a different view on this matter, particularly the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] who a moment ago indicated that we do have a common goal here—to end this conflict. I am convinced that continued external military flows into Angola have extended the conflict.

Mr. Chairman, it made no sense when our policy of supporting Jonas Savimbi with military assistance was first announced almost 5 years ago. Even then, at the height of the United States cold war with the Soviet Union, this policy was a colossal waste of money, driven by simplistic ideological labels. Our military involvement on behalf of UNITA had the unintended tragic effect of prolonging Angola's war, of delaying Namibia's transition to independence, of further emboldening South Africa in the destabilization of Angola and of deepening Angola's military dependence upon the Soviets and the Cubans. Even though the avowed goal of American policy was to do precisely the opposite.

If the administration's policy made no sense in late 1985, it makes even less sense today, 5 years and, reportedly, over $170 million in American assistance later, when according to published reports the administration has again asked American taxpayers to dig into their pockets to provide UNITA with an estimated $60 million.

Mr. Chairman, the cold war is over. The Soviets are openly searching for the means to scale back their already drastically reduced military flows to Angola—if the United States will cooperate. The Soviets have explicitly accepted the triple zero option in which all sides will end external military flows to Angola. Three-quarters of the Cuban forces have been withdrawn from Angola. The Angolans are engaged in a serious internal reform process and are desperate—for political, for economic, and for diplomatic reasons—to reconcile with the West.

It has been suggested that no concessions have been made by the Government of Angola. That is simply not the case. The Angolan Government has cooperated with American diplomacy for the last several years in ensuring the success of the Angolan-Namibian accords. It has agreed to the withdrawal of Cuban forces, and that withdrawal, as I indicated, is proceeding. It has agreed to facilitate the transition to Namibian independence. The Government of Angola agreed, in fact, to provide a kind of de facto recognition of Mr. Savimbi and his UNITA Party, when it agreed, to meet at Gbadolite where there was a handshake we all will recall between Mr. Savimbi and President Dos Santos. In the eyes of many independent observers, Mr. Savimbi walked away from that agreement. There has been an explicit agreement by the Angolan Government to move to a multiparty system. No ambiguity on that score. The only question is with respect to the specific timetable, and that concession we can expect very shortly.

There has also been an agreement by the Government of Angola to cross-border relief supplies into UNITA-held areas in southeast Angola. Because of that agreement, the International Committee of the Red Cross now has prepared a concrete plan for the delivery of such relief. Implementation of that plan is now in process.

The Angolan Government, moreover, has agreed to a series of major economic reforms that have been advocated by the United States and by Western states.

So, any notion that the Government of Angola has been intransigent or noncooperative, is simply not true.

Mr. Chairman, in the midst of our own dire budget crisis, when domestic programs are being cut across the board and when we must be much tougher in allocating scarce foreign aid to advance America's national security interests, it is patently outrageous for the administration to ask the American taxpayer to subsidize Jonas Savimbi.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WOLPE was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, $60 million in reported military assistance to UNITA represents not only an unadulterated waste of taxpayer funds, but also a step which will continue mindlessly adding to Angola's staggering human misery. We have heard of the indiscriminate use of land mines that has created the world's largest amputee population, estimated to be upwards of 50,000. The war has left over 300,000 dead, over 1 million refugees and displaced persons. In the next 2 months famine will threaten 1.9 million people. If there is no durable ceasefire soon and no effective removal of land mines, Mr. Chairman, two thirds of those at risk of starvation will likely not be reached. That is over 1 million people. If fighting continues at current levels, fueled by continued U.S. military flows, American relief agencies such as Catholic Relief Services and World Vision will fail to reach thousands in need.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the concern of those that continue to support this effort is that somehow we will undermine those perceived to be advocates of human rights and democracy in Angola. The government of Angola has an atrocious record on these matters, and American policy ought to be centered on the development of a genuine multiparty system with free elections and respect to fundamental human rights.

However, Mr. Chairman, let us be equally clear that the notion that Jonas Savimbi is the apostle and advocate of these values is simply belied by his own historical record. This is a man that initially traveled to the Soviet Union for support in the days when it was a different kind of Soviet Union. He then turned to China, became an avowed Maoist, and subsequently turned to South Africa.

The only thing that has been consistent about this individual over all these years has been the direct correlation between his ideology of the moment and his source of financial support.

Mr. Savimbi tells us today that he espouses democracy, and I hope he does. I genuinely do. But those who may not be conversant with the history of Angola need to know that this is a man who historically espoused a one-party state and saw himself at the helm of that state. During private conversations with me in my office, he acknowledged under questioning that indeed he was a socialist, more comfortable with the Chinese than the Soviet model.

Amnesty International, Africa Watch, and Savinbi's formerly sympathetic biographer, Fred Bridgland, have all documented repeated human rights violations: Witch burnings, forced labor, and disappearances and violent mistreatment of prominent UNITA personalities.

Just 2 weeks ago, yet another disturbing account appeared in the Washington Post, written by the award winning journalist, Leon Dash, which added further corroboration to charges of human rights abuses.

Life in UNITA-held areas has hardly evolved into a democratic model of broad participation. Power is tightly held in the hands of President Savimbi; UNITA's internal structure is designed along classic Marxist-Leninist lines; there is no history of free elections, free debate or pluralistic tolerance of opposing parties. Rather, society in Jamba has been described as a monopolistic personality cult, most recenty in an article by Radek Sikorski in the conservative National Review.

I don't raise this criticism to make the Angolan Government look better; that Government's record can also be roundly criticized. I emphasize these concerns because it is UNITA with which we have a close intimate relationship. It is UNITA which receives U.S. dollars, supposedly in the pursuit of democracy. Let's stop kidding ourselves: U.S. covert aid to UNITA is not about democracy and human rights.

The question is, is that the proper use of American tax dollars at this time of fiscal constraint?

Mr. Speaker, contrary to administration claims, United States policy has not brought the warring parties in Angola to the edge of peace and democracy. There have been several face-to-face, exploratory meetings between the Government and UNITA, but these do not amount to a substantive political breakthrough. For that to happen, we have to work far more actively with the Soviet Union to apply even-handed pressures upon both sides to reach a negotiated settlement.

Thus far this year, four rounds of Portuguese-mediated exploratory talks have failed to dislodge the Angolan Government and UNITA from their mutual deadlock. That is because each side remains mired in profound distrust and bitterness and each continues to rely overwhelmingly upon military might, in the vain hope that by bludgeoning the other side through one more round of fighting, it can improve its military position before compromising politically. Tragically, continued external military flows—United States, Soviet, South African—only feed this terrible dynamic.

Mr. Chairman, some dramatic step is required to push UNITA and the Angolan Government out of their deadlock. The amendment offered by Congressmen DELLUMS, DYMALLY, and HAMILTON will do just that. I urge all of my colleagues in the House to join me in voting in support of it. It is an action truly in the interests of all Angolans; it is an action in defense of the interests of the American taxpayer.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. I would be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman and I have a different view of Jonas Savimbi. The gentleman is unwilling to concede that he had his ride to Damascus and has been converted.

I too have talked to the man and I am convinced of his sincerity. That is neither here nor there.

All Savimbi and UNITA wants, and they have been fighting very successfully with darn little support compared to what the Soviets have poured into the MPLA, $800 million last year, to our—well, it is still secret. If nobody else will, I will maintain the secrecy of the amount. But they want a date for a cease-fire, a cease-fire that is internationally monitored, a date for an election that is internationally monitored, a change in the constitution so that it can be multiparty, not limited to one. For 15 years they have been waiting for that.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has influence with the Government. Why do you not urge it on them? As long as the Communists have all the weapons, even the ones the Cubans are leaving behind, and they have enough to last 15 years, I am informed, and as long as UNITA is starving to death, do you think it is an encouragement to negotiating democracy with the Communists if we cut off aid to UNITA?

Do you really think that?

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time to respond to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], let me say, first of all, the objectives the gentleman has just described in terms of the kind of constitutional system that will permit multiparty democracy and the full participation of UNITA in that process, I subscribe to as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] has again expired.

(By unamimous consent, Mr. WOLPE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] that the real issue at this point is not the difficulty in getting those kinds of agreements with respect to the constitution.

Mr. HYDE. But it is.

Mr. WOLPE. No, it is not. The Government of Angola has made very clear they are planning to address all of the issues and the concerns that the gentleman has just expressed. But the real issue at this point is Mr. Savimbi's insistence his standing army be kept fully in place throughout the election process.

Mr. HYDE. He is just against unilateral disarmament. So am I.

Mr. WOLPE. The issue is, the Government of Angola has made very clear it wishes to create a single military structure, abandon all party forces, and move to a freely elected multiparty government.

Mr. HYDE. If the gentleman will yield further, the tribal system that exists in that country is not going to go away. There are at least three major tribes. Some democracy has to happen soon.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it is in order to recount at this time some of the relatively recent efforts of the Angolan Government to bring about a peaceful settlement after 15 years of conflict in Angola:

First, the Government of Angola was one of the parties to the important Tripartite Agreement between Angola, South Africa, and Cuba. This agreement provided for the withdrawal of all Cuban troops from Angola; 80 percent of these troops have already been withdrawn; South African withdrawal from Namibia; free elections and independence for Namibia; and termination of South African military aid to UNITA.

Second, the following additional concessions have been made to the United States: The establishment of an open market economy with private ownership of businesses and land; a ceasefire and face-to-face negotiations with UNITA to end the civil conflict; internationally supervised open elections, universal suffrage, the principle of "one person-one vote" and the right of independent candidates to stand for elective office; revision of the Angolan Constitution to permit a multiparty political system and granting UNITA recognition as part of a comprehensive peace agreement.

Third, the Angolan Government has cooperated with the United Nations and the United States in insuring famine relief in UNITA-held territory.

Fourth, it has refrained, at the request of the U.S. administration, from bombing rebel positions in Jamba and has voluntarily withdrawn troops from the Mavinga and Mucundi areas.

Fifth, the Angolan Government has adjusted to the announcement of discontinued military aid from the Soviet Union.

Sixth, the Angolan Government has seriously proposed a triple zero option. This includes no further importation of lethal military weaponry from any country if the United States, including South Africa, would agree not to grant additional lethal military aid to UNITA.

In spite of these concessions and acts of cooperation, the United States continues to provide UNITA with increased military aid and weaponry which are used against civilian urban population centers and have inflicted numerous civilian casualties including very many women and children.

It is, indeed, ironic that in the midst of great human suffering, incredibly large numbers of amputees, endemic hunger and famine, that considerable amounts of money are being used for destructive and not humanitarian purposes.

The following observations are pertinent:

First, significant geopolitical changes have taken place globally since 1985, when the Clark amendment which led to the resumption of covert aid to UNITA was repealed.

Second, the United States continues to make huge militaristic expenditures and to give lethal aid to UNITA in spite of the fact that famine and hunger are rampant there.

Third, the Angolan conflict has claimed an estimated 340,000 lives and placed at risk of starvation from war and drought, at least 1.9 million civilians. Military campaigns have also displaced an estimated 465,000 and severly disrupted agricultural production.

Fourth, the toll has been particularly heavy on women and children. For example, one child dies every 4 minutes thereby contributing to Angola having one of the world's highest infant mortality rates. Angola also has more than 50,000 amputees, most are women and children, again, among the highest in the world.

Fifth, because of its grave budgetary problems, the United States cannot afford to give financial support of approximately $60 million in lethal aid to UNITA and neglect important domestic program such as Medicare and education.

Sixth, finally the New York Times editorial of Thursday, October 11, 1990, gives further justification for this amendment. It pointedly asks, "Does it really make any sense to continue an aid program rooted in the strategic assumptions of a different era?" It concludes by starting that, "This is the deeper question that Congress and the administration have not yet begun to address."

This amendment, my colleagues, specifically addresses this deeper question and, therefore, calls for your support.

Mr. Chairman, significant and far-reaching changes have taken place globally since 1985, when the Clark amendment was repealed and led to the resumption in 1986 of covert aid to the Angolan rebel movement known as the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA].

Paramount among these are the political and economic changes in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe which have markedly diminished the Communist threat and have made somewhat irrelevant the role of the United States Government in combatting and containing communism in Angola.

It is, therefore, critically incumbent upon the United States to reevaluate the size, nature, and content of its foreign aid to geopolitical areas such as Angola, which it has supported when Russia was the enemy.

It is, indeed, ironic that the United States is making huge militaristic expenditures in a country like Angola where famine and hunger run rampant. This conflict has lasted without clear cut results for 15 years and has claimed and estimated 340,000 lives and placed at risk of starvation from war and drought, at least 800,000 civilians. Additionally, one child dies every 4 minutes thereby contributing to Angola having one of the world's highest infant mortality rates in the world. Angola also has more than 50,000 amputees, most being women and children, again one of the highest in the world.

Mr. Chairman the present rancorous debates in the U.S. Congress concerning the huge budget deficits which threaten national security, make it quite clear that the United States can no longer afford to give financial support to UNITA to the tune of approximately $60 million. National reconcilation cannot be accomplished by militaristic activities and posturing.

Initially, military aid was extended to UNITA to confront a Soviet-backed government and as a leverage to encourage the withdrawal of Cuban troops. Approximately 80 percent of the Cubans have left Angola with the remainder leaving by July.

Additionally, both the Soviet Union and the United States have indicated plans to continue their successful global efforts of cooperation by becoming actively involved in the fourth round of talks to be held in Portugal in efforts to achieve a lasting cease-fire leading to constitutional changes in Angola which allow for free and fair multiparty elections.

Moreover, the Angolan Government has already made firm moves in that democratic direction and has also instituted merchanisms for a market economy.

Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to justify continued lethal, military aid to UNITA in view of the fact that the Soviet Union is in agreement with a "zero-zero option" which advocates cutting military aid to UNITA from the United States and military aid to the Angolan Government from the Soviet Union.

This amendment, for which the support of my colleagues is sought, makes the basic assumption that U.S. foreign policy which supports military operations abroad should not be made and implemented covertly.

In essence, it specifically prohibits covert assistance in support of military or paramilitary operations in Angola unless the provision of that assistance is the openly acknowledged policy of the United States. The President of the United States must, therefore, publicly inform the United States Congress and the American people that the support of the United States Government for military or paramilitary operations in Angola is important to the national security and the United States Congress has expressly approved such assistance. According to this amendment no military and lethal aid must be given by the United States to UNITA until or unless this basic condition is met.

In closing, and in keeping with my opening remarks, the New York Times editorial of Thursday, October 11, 1990, raised a cogent and critical question with respect to covert aid to Angola.

The editorial pointedly asks. "Does it really make any sense to continue an aid program rooted in the strategic assumptions of a different era?" The editorial concludes by stating that, "This is the deeper question that Congress and the Administration have not yet begun to address".

This amendment, my colleagues, specifically addresses this deeper question and therefore calls for your support.

Mr. Chairman, I submit for the RECORD correspondence concerning this matter.

PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC,
PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF ANGOLA.

His Excellency TOM FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

His Excellency ROBERT H. MICHEL,
Republican Leader, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER AND REPUBLICAN LEADER: I am pleased to state that my Government immensely appreciates the decision of the House of Representatives of the United States of America to allow for an open debate regarding lethal military aid to UNITA, at a time when we are undertaking serious efforts in order to reach a lasting peace in Angola.

My Government is indeed very disappointed by the fact that the Bush Administration has adopted a hostile attitude in relation to the initiatives of my Government and the peace process, in spite of the various concessions and numerous meeting with high U.S. Administration officials. I would also like to highlight that we do not understand if the Bush Administration is truly interested in a negotiated solution and democracy, or if it intends to bring UNITA to power by way of force.

I am certain that you are aware that the Angolan Government is in an advanced phase of preparation regarding its reform program with the following objectives:

1. Holding of free elections within the context of a multiparty system.
2. Creation of a one man, one vote electoral system
3. Development of a market economy.
4. Encouragement of foreign investment.
5. Enacting amendments to our Constitution and their submission to debate before their approval, with the participation of all the national political elements including UNITA, as long as they demilitarize themselves under the framework of the development of a single National Army, which has been discussed during the direct contacts held in Portugal.
6. My Government, in a letter addressed to Congressman Anthony Beilenson, Chairman of the [House of Representatives] Intelligence Committee, manifested its favorable position regarding the "triple zero" plan so long as the United States, and its allies also agree not to supply more military aid to UNITA. This political initiative which I introduced will certainly be subjected to international verification.

In spite of these initiatives as well as others, the Bush Administration continues to ignore our pledge to reach a lasting peace and ceasefire, arguing that UNITA has been very "flexible" during the peace negotiations. The truth is that UNITA never discussed or negotiated in good faith. My Government has consistently presented serious proposals regarding peace and an acceptable cease fire. UNITA, on the other hand, has proposed such unrealistic and vague ideas that it leads us to question its sincerity. Because of its lack of sincerity, difficulties have arisen with respect to ending the war in Angola. Because of this, we are convinced that UNITA is much more interested in prolonging the war in furtherance of its hidden agenda. It is for this reason alone that UNITA seeks to obtain even more military aid from the Bush Administration.

I urge that you consider that the Angolan Government by itself cannot end the war, although it is its deepest wish. The Angolan Government needs to count on the collaboration and help of the United States Congress to put an end to the supply of arms to UNITA within the framework of the "triple zero" plan.

It is our feeling that if Congress were to give special attention to the Solarz or Dellums Amendments, you will certainly note that either one of these amendments will help the Angolan people to attain peace and minimize their suffering.

With respect to the issue of free elections within the context of a multiparty system, I would like to state that the Angolan Government is committed to holding them as soon as possible, once peace and stability have been attained. It would first be necessary to proceed with a census of the population and to implement all the necessary steps with regard to the preparation of the electoral process, despite the very complex committed to holding free and democratic elections, and, therefore, they will be organized accordingly.

Please accept the expression of my highest consideration.

JOSE EDUARDO DOS SANTOS,
President of the People's Republic of Angola.

PERMANENT MISSION OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF ANGOLA TO THE UNITED NATIONS,
New York, NY, October 11, 1990.

Re U.S. Lethal Military Aid for Unita.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: I urge your support for efforts to end U.S. lethal military assistance to Unita. Termination of military assistance will bring peace to Angola and end unnecessary bloodshed. Continued lethal military assistance only serves to delay progress in the Angolan-Unita direct peace talks and ignors my Government's efforts to reach a non-military resolution of our civil war.

The Government of Angola has instituted substantive structural reforms in pursuit of peace and democracy. The Angolan economy is moving toward a market-based model free of state subsidies and control. My Government has committed itself to the formation of a constitutional multi-party democracy in Angola and has made numerous other concessions. To continue U.S. lethal military assistance to Unita undercuts our serious efforts and suggests a lack of commitment to finding a peaceful solution to our war.

The military conflict in my country which the United States has funded has resulted in the loss of many lives. Innocent women and children have been maimed and injured by Unita attacks and land mines. Angola presently has the highest per capita amputee rate in the world due to this reckless destruction and guerrilla warfare. The people of Angola deserve peace and my Government is sincerely committed to peace.

In pursuit of peace we have requested that the Bush Administration support the so-called "triple-zero" option. My Government is committed to making no new purchases of military supplies from the Soviet Union, or any other country, provided that, of course, for our army if the U.S. discontinues its delivery of military supplies to Unita. My Government made this commitment in writing to the Chairman of the House Intelligence committee and is committed to implementing such an agreement upon receipt of the Bush Administration's commitment to the "triple zero" option. To date, the Bush Administration has not embraced this important compromise but has persisted in its effort to continue major funding or lethal military assistance to Unita. We believe, therefore, that a Congressional decision to discontinue covert military assistance would send a strong signal of America's desire for permanent peace in my country.

On behalf of my Government, we respectfully urge your support of the efforts of Congressman Dellums, Dymally, Hamilton, Richardson, and Solarz, to change U.S. policy on providing assistance to Unita when their amendments to the Intelligence Authorization Bill are considered.

If you have any questions or desire any additional information, please feel free to call me at 212/861-5656 or contact our Washington representative, Robert B.

Washington, Jr., Esquire at 202/857-4017. Thanking you in advance for your careful consideration, I remain,

Sincerely,

MANUEL PEDRO PACAVIRA,
Permanent Representative for Angola to the United Nations.

SUMMARY POSITION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA REGARDING INCREASED LETHAL MILITARY AID TO UNITA REBELS, OCTOBER 10, 1990

BACKGROUND

1. War since independence: Since gaining its independence from Portugal in 1975, Angola has been engaged in a war between the Government and the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola ("Unita").

2. Government agreed to Cuban troop withdrawal:

a. On December 22, 1988, the Government of Angola (the "Government") agreed to sign a Tripartite Agreement as the result of prolonged talks between Angola, Cuba and South Africa mediated by the U.S. The Agreement between Angola, South Africa and Cuba provided for the withdrawal of all Cuban troops from Angola; South African widthdrawal from Namibia; free elections and independence for Namibia; and termination of South African military aid to Unita.

b. South Africa continues to supply major arms and other military equipment to Unita through Zaire. The Government continues to protest these violations of the Tripartite Agreement and has called these violations to the attention of representatives of the Administration.

3. Angolan Government concessions: President Jose Eduardo dos Santos has reached out to the U.S. and, after consultations between governments, has agreed to: (i) the withdrawal of Cuban troops; (ii) the establishment of an open market economy with private ownership of businesses and land; (iii) a cease-fire and face-to-face negotiations with Unita to end the civil conflict; (iv) internationally supervised open elections, universal suffrage, the principle of "one man-one vote" and the right of independent candidates to stand for elective office; and (v) revision of the Angolan Constitution to permit a multiparty political system pursuant to a public referendum.

4. Cooperation on famine relief. The Government has expedited international famine relief to Unita-held territory by inviting a UN census; agreeing to a UN delivery plan; and permitting cross-border deliveries through Namibia to Southern Angola by non-governmental international relief agencies.

5. Offensive against rebel positions delayed. At the request of the Administration the Government refrained from continuing to bomb rebel positions in Jamba and has voluntarily withdrawn its troops from the Mavinga and Mucundi areas although these areas are of strategic importance to the rebels and are sources of resupply.

6. Peace negotiations underway. The Government has participated in good-faith in four rounds of face-to-face peace negotiations using a format similar to that used in Namibia. The Government and Unita have exchanged peace proposals and have invited the U.S. and U.S.S.R. to observe and participate under the auspices of the Portuguese government. Unita continues to insist that it be recognized as a legitimate opposition political party before even a cease-fire is put in place. The Government believes a multiparty system must follow constitutional changes and a popular referendum but is willing to grant Unita recognition as part of a comprehensive peace agreement.

7. U.S. recommends increased lethal military aid to Unita. Only the U.S. refuses to recognize the Government of Angola. The U.S. continues to supply approximately $80 million in covert lethal military aid to the Unita rebels through secret defense appropriations and the CIA contingency fund. Despite important concessions made to the U.S. by the Government, the Bush Administration has reportedly requested increased covert military assistance to Unita for fiscal 1991, and the House Intelligence Committee has approved additional aid.

8. U.S.S.R. to discontinue military aid. The Soviet Union, which previously supplied weapons to the Government, has announced that, in the interest of resolving this conflict, it will discontinue all such supplies.

9. Pledge to import no new arms. The Government has proposed a "triple zero option" in which it would agree to import no new lethal military weaponry from any country if the U.S. and its key allies including Saudi Arabia, South Africa and Zaire would agree not to grant additional lethal military aid to Unita. To date, neither the Bush Administration nor its allies supporting Unita have agreed to this proposal.

B. POSITION

The U.S. should discontinue covert lethal military assistance to Unita in order to: (i) promote a peaceful resolution of the Angolan Civil War; and (ii) promote closer U.S.-Angolan relations and cooperation.

C. RATIONALE

1. U.S. actions could undercut the peace process. Continuing U.S. military aid undercuts the ability of both the Government and Unita to negotiate peace. Unita has side tracked cease-fire discussions in order to maintain additional military support. Despite numerous promises to President dos Santos by the Administration that specific conciliatory actions will lead to upgraded relations with the U.S., relations have not improved and military support for the opposition is actually increasing. The U.S. Administration's response to the Government's initiatives do not encourage further concessions by the Government or the peace process.

2. U.S. weapons kill civilians. U.S. weapons are being used increasingly against civilian urban population centers including: public buildings, utilities and highways. Huge numbers of civilian casualties have been inflicted by U.S. weapons including large numbers of women and children in an attempt to undermine popular support for the Government.

3. Government concessions ignored. The Government has made most of the significant concessions requested by the U.S. and a process is underway which may lead to settlement of disputes and early elections. Increased levels of lethal military aid in the face of these constructive developments is inconsistent foreign policy and is not in the best interests of Angola or the U.S.

4. U.S. action prolongs conflict. U.S. military assistance which could approach $100 million in FY 1991 (if the Administration's request is granted) continues to prolong the process of the peaceful resolution of the conflict. These resources could be used more productively to end economic suffering and famine, or assist in drought relief.

5. U.S. and U.S.S.R. can create peace. The U.S.S.R. has offered to discontinue its arms shipments to the Government and believes superpower involvement in this regional conflict should cease immediately. The U.S. has a golden opportunity to work constructively with the U.S.S.R. create peace, stability, and strengthen an important trading partner in Southern Africa.

6. U.S.S.R. domination no longer a threat. Given the changes in the world political structure, the U.S. can no longer justify a policy that promotes Africans killing other Africans in the name of ending Soviet world domination.

7. Elimination of aid would encourage Unita to negotiate in good-faith. Elimination, or a decrease in U.S. assistance to Unita, would create a strong incentive for Unita to bargain in good-faith for a cease-fire and peaceful resolution, rather then expending its resources in a domestic U.S. public relations campaign.

Please telephone Robert B. Washington, Jr., Steven Pruitt or Marc J. Scheineson at (202) 857-4000 if you require additional information.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I would say to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], I do not want to abolish the Committee on Intelligence, because my friend is chairman. Given the youthfulness of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, Mr. BEILENSON will never become a chairman unless he keeps this one, so for that reason, I want to keep him as chairman. I do not want to abolish it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for bringing to our attention the fact that we may be here for Christmas. In California we have become very sophisticated. We call it the mail vote. But I do want to go home for Christmas. After Christmas I want the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] to visit Angola and see these maimed children with me, so we can have some compassion and bring an end to this war.

Mr. Chairman, we are debating the cold war on this floor. That is not the issue. We missed the point. The point is to have open debate on this subject matter.

My good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] may have inadvertently done a disservice to the dedicated, able and loyal staff of the Committee on Intelligence by suggesting that the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] should go to them to find out about the food corridors. The fact of the matter is, if we went to them, they would tell us the Red Cross has approved the food corridors, that the State Department knows about the food corridors. My good friend, the eloquent gentleman, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] may have made a good case of why we should have open debate on this subject and not depend on covert information, because he has given to this House inadvertently wrong information, as a member of the very important and prestigious Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYMALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I could not hear the gentleman. He said I gave the House wrong information. Would the gentleman tell me what that was?

Mr. DYMALLY. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman suggested to the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] that if he really wants to find out about the food corridor, he should go to the staff, and he implied that the food corridors were not open.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I assert that they are starving to death in the UNITA section because Zambia—I said Zaire, but I meant Zambia—and Namibia will not permit food to come in without Dos Santos' OK, and he has not given it.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, that is not true. That is the point I am trying to make. The fact of the matter is, the State Department will tell you that the Angolan Government has given permission, and the Red Cross has certified it. That is the wrong information, which prompts me to suggest that we need to have open debate on these matters, that we cannot trust the gentleman with this kind of important information.

Now, having said that, let me say this: We ended the war in Nicaragua, not because we had covert aid, but because this Congress, in open debate, stopped the aid. As a result of stopping the aid, we were able to have free elections.

We are asking Angola to have free elections while we supply aid. If we really want to have free elections, we ought to stop the aid. The fact of the matter is, let us stop fighting the cold war in the Halls of Congress.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYMALLY. It is always a pleasure to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, we did stop the aid in 1976 for 10 years, and all that happened were the Communists got stronger and stronger and stronger. No democracy.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman raised that issue, because I had a note here and I passed over it. The South Africans were supplying the arms when the Clark amendment went into effect. As a member of the Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman knows that. The South Africans today are supplying arms.

The reason why UNITA wants arms, they want to do what the Contras tried to do, to have a separate and private army within the context of a coalition government. That is the reason why. But let us forget whether they are Marxists or whether they are rebels. Let us think about these children. Let us think about the people who are dying.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] made reference to the fact that as an African-American he is concerned about these children. It was suggested, and properly so, that this was not a question of race. But let me just say this: If you were an African-American, and you looked around the world, you would see my friend Mr. Baker shuttling back and forth to meet the Foreign Minister of the U.S.S.R. bringing peace to Europe, bringing peace to Asia, bringing peace to Latin America, and these two men cannot bring peace to Africa. What are you going to ask? What are you going to say?

All over the world peace is coming to the forefront, and in Africa thousands of people are dying because of bombing, thousands are dying because of famine, thousands are maimed because of bombs from both sides. I am not putting blame on just us.

Mr. HYDE. If the gentleman will yield, Afghanistan is not in Europe, it is not Latin America. Afghanistan is a very ethnic country. There is a lot of bombing and killing, and a lot of children with legs off, and it is because the Soviets still have dreams of empire. They are there still, they are pouring more in as they are in Angola.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] has expired.

(By unanimous consent Mr. DYMALLY was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] and I are African-Americans. We are not Afghanis. So let me say this, it is a matter of concern to 30 million African-Americans who are concerned about this misery, this suffering, and that is what we are trying to address here today. If we could do this without this amendment, then we should do it.

Why could not Mr. Baker and Mr. Shevardnadze arrange an agreement to stop arms on both sides? By the way, the gentleman keeps saying that the Russians are pouring arms into Angola. For God's sake, Angola is the legitimate government. They must defend the integrity of their system and their turf. They are not rebels.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYMALLY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the gentleman's last question he raised is a very important one about the possibility of the Soviet Union and the United States jointly agreeing to stop the flow of arms.

I think it should be emphasized in the course of this debate, by those who have expressed concern, that if we stop and then they do not, then there is an unfair advantage here. The Soviet Union right now, by everyone's acknowledgment, is providing greater amounts of assistance than the United States, and has publicly stated and in private diplomacy as well has made absolutely clear that they are prepared to stop all arms flows whatsoever to the Angola Government if we do the same to the forces of UNITA.

So as a matter of public record there is discussions in the Soviet Union and negotiations, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DYMALLY. The gentleman and I have agreed on one thing, and that is that we need to have peace.

The difference between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] and the gentleman from California is how do we get there. Why do we not just stop the arms, period?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYMALLY. I am glad to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made a statement that the Government in Luanda, the Communist MPLA, is the legitimate Government of Angola. The fact of the matter is they seized power out of the barrel of a gun, in violation of the ALVOR Agreements. The gentleman well knows that, and that is one of the reasons why this conflict is going on right now.

The other thing I would like to set straight is that the Soviet Union this year is sending $500 million in additional aid into Angola, and there is a stockpile of weapons, some estimated as high as a 10-year stockpile of weapons that the Communist have.

Let me just say we want this resolved. I think this debate probably has gone on long enough. But I would just like to end up by saying one more thing.

Mr. DYMALLY. If I can reclaim my time, we took this country from the barrel of a gun from the British. I mean what is new?

But let me just say to the gentleman, every country in the world recognizes Angola but the United States and South Africa. By the way, we are in company with South Africa.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYMALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has hit on a great idea: Stop the arms and reduce the armaments inside the country. I am told the Cubans have left an awful lot of arms behind them.

Mr. DYMALLY. Indeed.

Mr. HYDE. They have a stockpile for 15 years. Let us get them out, have an internationally supervised ceasefire. We could do it tomorrow.

Mr. DYMALLY. So could I get a commitment from the gentleman that he will be on this floor today urging the United States Government to cease the arms flow while I join with the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] and urge the Russians to cease their arm flow.

Mr. HYDE. We can urge together, and I hope you are as successful as I am.

Mr. DYMALLY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, let me just say in conclusion that the Angolans have agreed to phase out the Cubans and about 80 percent have left. They have agreed with the United States to have an open market economy. They are working closely with the United Nations. They have refrained from bombing certain territories at the request of the U.S. Government. They have agreed to discontinue receiving aid from the Soviet Union. They are in support of the triple zero option proposal and, indeed, they have shown every bit of good faith in communications with Mr. MICHEL, with Mr. FOLEY, with the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, with the State Department, and others. They have done everything conceivable.

What we are asking to do is to stop the arms so that we can sit down and talk about peace. Let us save the children.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have a fascinating and a very relevant debate going on, and I want to thank the gentleman from California for having proposed this amendment in the first instance.

As someone who was a proponent of aid to the contras, but not until the President made it overt instead of covert, I understand what the gentleman is attempting to do, and I support him in attempting to have an overt discussion, which of course we are now having, even though this is covert aid. We are back in that mode again.

The problem with this is we are seeing the vestiges of two enormously compatible political philosophies fighting each other because on the one side the philosophy which governed the Government of Angola, the Marxist-Leninist theory, has crumbled in most places but Angola, and on the other side the Maoist theory of communism has been rejected by the leader of UNITA, or at least we think so, and we would like to hope so.

So here we have two places, one which is bankrupt because that on which it was founded is gone, and the other having rejected as bankrupt that which it originally believed in trying to get power in a country on a permanent basis.

We have been involved in that fight, so far on the side of the UNITA rebels. Would it be right for us to be involved in this fight? Yes, because we are trying in Angola, as in other places in Africa, to bring peace and democracy.

Is it right to do it overtly? Yes. We should not have covert operations if we believe in that which we are trying to achieve. We should be doing it out in the open, and it should be subject to debate.

The only real issue, procedurally, with the gentleman's amendment that can be legitimately attacked is the problem of the time frame. If this had been on the floor 6 months ago, I frankly probably would have been a supporter, because subsequent, had the amendment passed, we could have in fact had this discussion out in the open and made a decision to continue the aid or not to continue the aid.

But we are not faced with that. We are faced with the reality, because I subscribe to what the gentleman from Illinois has said with reference to what weaponry is available inside the country. I also subscribe to what the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] has said, because there are children dying. It is a terrible shame, and I am not an African-American, and I would not like to see any more children die.

The problem is how do we stop it all, not piecemeal? How do we just stop it instead of slowing it down and another 15 years elapses before we have a conclusion?

We have all agreed, those proponents and those opponents of this amendment, that the parties have come much closer. Mr. WOLPE, chairman of the Africa Subcommittee, whose knowledge and intelligence and capability on this issue both sides support and commend, has said that on the one hand Dos Santos has said they want multiparty elections. Mr. Savimbi has said he wants a government to engage in negotiations to come to multiparty elections. We are really getting closer, if the pronouncements are to be believed.

The question is: Having come this close, having had pronouncements from both sides, having seen that the Soviet Union is enunciating, as the proponents of this amendment have said, that they are going to withdraw their support, having seen the Cubans are leaving Angola in large numbers due to what we have attempted to negotiate with them and the Soviet Union, is it now really, at this moment, right now, is it smart or precipitous to end the aid?

There really is not much more of a question here. Is it smart right now for furthering our foreign policy purposes to bring peace to Angola, to bring a multiparty election, no matter who wins? Because nobody here has talked about trying to influence the elections. No matter who wins, let the people of Angola make up their minds.

Or is it precipitous? Because once having removed that underpinning of support from Mr. Savimbi, we leave him in a terribly disadvantaged position, the person on whom we have pinned our hopes to bring the Dos Santos government to the table to negotiate those free, multiparty, open elections.

I watched last night on channel 3 here in Washington, if anybody else saw it, a small piece on the children in Africa including the children of Angola. The tragedy cannot be described from this well in adequate terms. To watch those children crawling because their legs have been blown off, you cannot describe it. You cannot, in good conscience.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, you cannot, in good conscience, want this to continue, but the question resolves itself again.

If we now at this juncture, at this moment, cut it off, will we be confining scores, hundreds, thousands more of Angolan children, innocent children to the same fate as their older brothers and sisters? Or do we just give it that little bit extra and pray to God that we are doing the right thing?

Unfortunately, I must disagree with my very dear friend, and I want him to know that I am a very significant admirer of his capability and his intelligence, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS], it is not the right time. We have to give this last shot at it a chance to work, and it will not work, if we disable the one party right now.

But I will join with the gentleman, I tell him from this well, if we do this, defeat this gentleman's amendment and the Solarz amendment and 6 or 7 months from now we have gone nowhere and/or Mr. Savimbi does not live up to what he claims is his goal now, then I will join with the gentleman not only to make this overt, but, frankly, to end it.

I believe that at this moment we would be precipitous and acting against the interests of all of the people of Angola to leave Mr. Savimbi in a disadvantaged position, and that is, frankly, where I come down as an individual who cares about what happens for the future children of Angola.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me compliment the gentleman for a very thoughtful presentation, clearly heartfelt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. DELLUMS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. DELLUMS. If the gentleman will yield further, Mr. Chairman, I understand the logic and the politics of the gentleman's statement.

First of all, I appreciate the fact that when the gentleman looks at our amendment he said, frankly, there is nothing wrong with the amendment except the issue of timing, because you know that this amendment raises the issue of process. It also raises the substantive question by inference as well.

The gentleman pointed out that if it had come 6 months ago, he and I may have been standing here advocating the very same position.

The problem is that the gentleman and I do not have control over the process here, and there are a lot of bills that come 6 months late, and that is a frustration that we all have, whether we are Republicans or Democrats, or wherever we fall on the scale. We have no control over that process.

But coming to the last point the gentleman made, he said, and he came down to the judgment, is it smart or is it precipitous, and he made the judgment that it is precipitous, and I respect that.

I do not challenge it, except simply to say that I come to a different conclusion. I come down saying it is not precipitous. I come down saying that I believe that it is smart.

We operate around here on the basis of sending signals, sending messages. The signal that I would like to see in this great Nation, is that by ending aid and coming forward in an open kind of fashion if, indeed, it is necessary, sends two messages. First, we believe in openness and democratic principles, but more importantly, we are saying to the parties there that no longer will we support military involvement, come to the table and negotiate.

Finally, I would say that my colleague knows the tragedy of this discussion is covert aid. If it does not work, you can always go covert again, and maybe this time it would not be on the front page of the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Reclaiming my time, the gentleman is right as to the last point. They could always go covert again.

Frankly, it would not. We know the process, as well.

Secondarily, let me just say we can come to different conclusions, and while the gentleman and I agree completely on the South African issue, many of our colleagues disagree, and yet we turned out, I believe, to be right.

I do not condemn them for their belief, because I think they thought it might turn out a different way.

I believe, however, on this issue that the next few months is the turning point for the future of Angola, and we would be doing harm to American foreign policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH] has again expired.

(By unanimous consent. Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. We would be doing harm to American foreign policy, which has brought us to this point, as seemly as it may have been over that period of time, and no one can defend what has happened to the people and the children of Angola, but as seemly as it is, it has brought us to this point. It has brought us to both sides saying, "We are ready to negotiate multiparty elections."

I do not believe at this point we should sacrifice that 15 years' worth of time and the money we have spent which pales in comparison to the blood and the loss that has been felt and sustained by the people of Angola. I believe we owe them that commitment to see it through a few months more, and hope to God that it works.

Mr. PAYNE of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment. I have listened very carefully, and there is not very much new that can be added to this discussion.

I simply, at times during the discussion, thought that I was back in 1952 at the hearings of the McCarthy era when we were trying to weed out the Red tide, or in 1960 when Mr. Nixon and Mr. Khrushchev and President Kennedy were arguing about burying democracy with communism. This is the only place I have heard from this antiquated discussion about the Communist threat of anywhere left in the United States other than here as we relate it to Angola.

It is really time to stop the disgraceful history of foreign military internvention in Angola. The Angolan people suffered 500 years of foreign colonial subjugation that denied them not only basic human rights, but attempted to deny them human dignity as well.

Portugal was the last European power to grant independence to its African colonies. Throughout the entire decolonization process the United States really did very little to help emerging nations in Africa and supported the colonialists from Europe because they were our NATO allies. The armed struggle against the Portuguese began in Angola in 1961 and lasted for 14 years. Unrest in Portugal provoked a coup d'etat in Lisbon in 1974 and the new government withdrew the support from its colonies in 1975, and withdrew from its colonies of Mozambique, Guinea-Bissau, Cape Verde, and Angola.

The United States chose Holden Roberto and the National Front for the Liberation of Angola [FNLA] to support over the MPLA and UNITA, at that time. But here in 1990 we are still engaged in covert aid to Angola to the tune of $60 million, it is suggested, but at the same time, we are supporting UNHCR to care for Angolan refugees in Zambia. That makes no sense. We could take that $60 million and have it so for underdeveloped nations to help them with their economic development or for our domestic programs or even to reduce the debt as we have heard talked about so much during these past 3 of 4 days.

A disproportionate number of citizens, mostly women and children, have been maimed because of the tactics of land mines in Angola.

Last year Rev. Ben Chavis and the former medical director of the city of Newark, NJ, where I reside, Dr. Troutman, traveled to Angola and arranged for some children crippled by UNITA land mines to come to Newark to be fitted with artificial limbs at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey. There are currently 50,000 amputees, as we know.

There are currently 50,000 amputees, as we know. But recently, at a hearing held in the Committee on Armed Services room, the Soviet Chief of Staff told Gen. Colin Powell that the Soviets were ready to cut off arms to Angola the next day, he said, if the United States was willing to stop its aid to UNITA.

Let me also make one thing clear, that the aid has not been grants to the Government of Angola. Weapons and arms have been purchased. They are not grants like we have been doing for UNITA. Therefore, I am strongly urging that at this time we cut off the aid. The people of the government have agreed to have the Cubans leave Angola. They have agreed to multinational parties. They have agreed to allow Mr. Savimbi to participate in the elections. They have agreed to have a market economy. They have agreed to recognize UNITA. I think that at this time we ought to end the aid. We should work toward having a settlement.

Finally, there has been talk about the suspension of discussions in Lisbon. The reason for suspension of discussion in Lisbon at this time between MPLA and UNITA is the Central Committee will be meeting in Angola on the 25th and 26th of this month, and they are in the process of discussing what is happening in Lisbon at the peace talks, and will immediately resume discussions in Lisbon after the party meets in Angola in the next few days. So this is not an attempt to end the discussion of peace talks in Angola and Lisbon, but I think that we should strongly support this resolution.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word. I will not take a full 5 minutes. I know all Members will be happy to hear that. I have a prepared statement that I have read and everything in it has been stated.

Clearly, this is a contentious issue. Just as clearly it is a serious issue. I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California. As those Members on this floor know, the gentleman and I do not always agree on issues of international security. I tend, as he reminds me from time to time, to be more hawkish than he. However, as I have considered the issues relating to United States funding one side or the other in civil wars, in my observation, for example, in Nicaragua with respect to funding, the former Speaker of this House, Jim Wright was instrumental in bringing about a peaceful resolution. Subsequently a vote in Nicaragua which resulted in the victory of democracy, makes a persuasive argument that at some point in time withdrawing aid may, in fact, further the peace process in Angola.

I, therefore, rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from California. I agree with him as well, and with others who have spoken eloquently on this floor, that it is time to give a chance to the innocent in Angola. I understand very well what the gentleman from Illinois says, that there is much wrong, perhaps on both sides. I also agree with my friend from Illinois very strongly that those who lead in the name of Communist dictatorships do not deserve the support and comfort of the United States, which believes that it is not in the best interests of the overwhelming majority of people. However, it has been my observation that we have supported this policy for some period of time, and the gentleman's amendment is worth a chance, in my opinion, worth a change in policy, reaching out to make a change which may well result in both sides moving. I hope that is the case.

Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleagues, Congressmen DELLUMS, DYMALLY, and HAMILTON, to prohibit covert aid in fiscal year 1991 to the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola more commonly known as UNITA. I commend them for their dedication and commitment in recognizing that the United States needs to change its policy toward Angola.

Mr. Chairman, the situation in Angola has generated a lot of debate and has proven to be an extremely contentious issue. There are those who believe that any group who claims to fight for democracy deserves our support and the lethal aid of this country despite the obvious fact that current U.S. policy has failed.

It has been 4 years since Congress sustained President Reagan's policy of giving covert lethal aid to the anti-government UNITA rebels. At that time the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Mr. HAMILTON, inserted language into the intelligence authorization bill prohibiting aid to the UNITA rebels unless it had been publicly debated and approved by Congress. Unfortunately, that language was stricken from the bill by those who felt the language restricted the authority of the President. I supported the committee chairman's language to restrict aid to UNITA then, and I support the language now.

The death toll in Angola as a result of the war and famine has now reached over 500,000. The United Nations estimates that close to 2 million people are at risk of starvation due to the conditions of war and the obstacles restricting food delivery and relief. In addition, Angola has the highest amputee rate in the world with over 50,000 amputees, mostly women and children who frequent UNITA's landmine target areas such as schools and agricultural areas. Surely this type of death and destruction is not what we should be financing.

Mr. Chairman, United States policy directed toward installing a democratic government in Angola has been unsuccessful. It is patently obvious that the cold war policy is outdated and the real impediment to achieving peace in Angola is the continuation of aid to the UNITA rebels. Last year UNITA's leader Jonas Savimbi violated the terms of the Gbadolite summit peace initiative and cease-fire agreement mediated by 18 African heads of state and the Organization of African Unity. Continuing aid to UNITA gives Savimbi absolutely no incentive to agree to any future cease-fire or peace agreements. In fact, some of the nations involved in negotiating the peace settlement maintain that UNITA is the principal obstacle to obtaining peace.

The Angolan Government has recently made significant progress toward improving relations with the United States and toward initiating peace; 38,000 of the Cuban troops stationed in Angola have been withdrawn and the remaining 12,000 are to be sent home in July. The Soviet Union has significantly reduced aid to the Angolan Government and has agreed to immediately halt aid when United States funds to UNITA are cut. In addition, Angola has taken steps to espouse a multiparty system and is offering concessions to UNITA to prepare for free and fair elections, the very same principles for which UNITA has supposedly been fighting for the past 16 years.

Mr. Chairman, Jonas Savimbi and his UNITA rebels have not demonstrated a willingness to negotiate for a peaceful resolution to this long and bloody conflict. It is time for the United States to realize that the only effective means to negotiate a settlement is for all parties involved to stop financing this carnage. How dare we ask our constituents to finance the atrocious and brutal crimes committed by Jonas Savimbi and UNITA to the tune of $60 to $80 million. I must quote the executive director of the Washington Office on Africa, Aubrey McCutcheon III: "If the United States would be so quick to rush money and weapons to continue a war against a country already agreeing to adopt both democracy and free enterprise, if the resulting war victims were white." The answer, I think, is no. Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to support for the Dellums, Dymally, Hamilton amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Will the gentleman tell me how, if we stopped aiding UNITA, that will move the Soviets to stop aiding the MPLA?

Mr. HOYER. Let me observe that I believe the Soviets have started to do that, No. 1. No. 2, I think the Soviets would very frankly, in my own view, like an excuse to stop sending money because they are getting dead flat broke as we all know. Their policies have radically changed.

I do not stand here as a proponent or apologist for policies of the United States that I do not agree with, but in point of fact we know there has been a very dramatic revolutionary change which was talked to by our President in his speech to this Congress earlier this year. In the State of the Union he said a revolutionary change had occurred.

Mr. HYDE. I agree, and Mr. Gorbachev won the Nobel Prize. No, if he would just quit sending armaments in the millions to the Najibullah government which Communists imposed on the Afghans, and stopped spending $500 million so far this year to the dos Santos Communist MPLA, we could have peace in a hurry.

Mr. HOYER. Let me suggest to my friend from Illinois, with whom I have a great deal of respect and with whom I agree from time to time on a number of issues, let Members see what his response to this will be. Let Members see what the internal debate is on this when there is no longer the argument that they have to send money because the United States is sending money. I believe that that argument was certainly used with respect to Nicaragua. On that question, the gentleman and I probably disagree. As a matter of fact, I think that much of the buildup in Nicaragua was a result of the infusion of United States moneys. I know we disagree on that.

However, my suggestion is that the gentleman's amendment gives Members a chance to test that. We can always change. We are going to be back here in the short term, and we can change that policy if we are incorrect. However, I think it is time to give that alternative a chance.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Dymally-Dellums-Hamilton amendment to prohibit covert aid to the UNITA rebels in Angola.

This amendment would remove the mock secrecy which now shields our Angola policy from open public debate. We certainly don't call this policy covert because it's a secret. It has been openly acknowledged by two Presidents and gleefully promoted by an entire squad of conservative cheerleaders. No, this policy is covert only in the sense that it is not subject to public scrutiny.

This amendment would force the issue out of the recesses of the covert budget, and move it into the light, where it can be openly discussed just like any other foreign policy proposal.

I am convinced that once U.S. support to UNITA is subjected to this kind of open congressional debate, it will collapse under its own weight.

The Reagan administration originally justified this policy by reference to the global cold war struggle with the Soviet Union. Now that this justification no longer makes sense, the Bush administration has shifted gears. They argue that military aid to UNITA will somehow promote democracy and national reconciliation in Angola.

Yet with our aid, UNITA has launched military attacks against medical facilities; has attempted to starve civilians in the areas it controls; and has used land mines which indiscriminately maim both children and adults. Can anyone truly believe that democracy and national reconciliation can be achieved through such means? I hope not.

Mr. Chairman, the Reagan doctrine did not make any sense when it was first concocted. Today, it looks like a stubborn dinosaur refusing to acknowledge that the world has changed.

Let's put this foolish policy behind us, and help the outdated Reagan doctrine join its namesake in retirement. I urge my colleagues to support the Dymally-Dellums-Hamilton amendment.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dellums and Solarz amendments cutting off and restricting, respectively, aid to the anti-Communist UNITA forces in Angola. While I too would very much like to see the bloody civil war in Angola end through peaceful, negotiated means, I believe that will not occur if either of these well intentioned, but harmful amendments are adopted.

I agree that the world has undergone many incredible changes over the past year warranting changes in policy. Unfortunately, some places have yet to witness this new explosion of freedom and democracy. Angola is one of those still oppressed places.

Some claim our policy in Angola has not worked. They're wrong. They also said the same thing about our policy in Europe—which helped foster today's democratic revolutions—and Central America. History has proven time and again that only serious pressure forces Communist dictatorships to come to the negotiating table. Only serious pressures forces them to remain at the table and deal, and only serious pressure forces them to live up to the agreements they sign. Our support for UNITA provides that very necessary serious pressure.

Already, a lot of progress has been made in Angola. Under the sponsorship of the Portuguese, UNITA and the MPLA have met and have made considerable progress toward a cease-fire and free, democratic elections. Unfortunately, there is still a wing of the MPLA that believes UNITA can be militarily defeated and Angola can remain a repressive, one-party Communist state. They are looking for a sign of weakening support for UNITA and they will find it if we adopt either of these amendments. Once found, they will exploit it scuttling the efforts for a peaceful, negotiated settlement, thereby prolonging the bloodshed—just the opposite of what we claim we want.

Time is on our side. Unlike in the past, the Soviets are cooperating with us to achieve a peaceful, negotiated settlement. Yet, they do not fully control the Luanda government, meaning the MPLA, with its vast stockpiles of weapons, can still hold out for the military option some politbureau members want. It is key for us to keep UNITA strong and show that we back those struggling for freedom and democracy. We're almost there. Here in the last inning of the game we're winning is not the time to change strategy and risk a terrible loss. Let's finish the game. If these negotiations do fail and if the current Baker-Shevardnadze efforts are not successful, then and only then should we change our policy.

I am very strongly opposed to the Dellums amendment because it would give the MPLA everything its hardliners want and require nothing in the forms of freedom and democracy in return. I find it very strange that we are correctly willing to fight racial apartheid in South Africa, yet unwilling—as support for the Communist MPLA does—to fight economic and political apartheid in black African nations. With all of our support for freedom and democracy around the globe, I cannot believe that we're considering cutting off the chances for the Angolan people to achieve these basic human rights and condemning them to a gloomy, repressive future under harsh, Stalinist MPLA rule. That's what enactment of the Dellums-Dymally-Hamilton amendment would do.

We're on the verge of success, that means a cease-fire and free elections for the Angolan people who have been struggling hard at great sacrifice for this for the past 15 years. Let's not ruin this real possibility by adopting either of these amendments. I also welcome my colleagues to review the following letter I received from Secretary of State Baker which further reinforces in a very articulate and convincing way the dangers of these two amendments.

I urge my colleagues to vote for real peace in Angola and vote against both the Solarz and the Dellums-Dymally-Hamilton amendments.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, DC.

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO,
House of Representatives.

DEAR BOB: You soon will be voting on H.R. 5422, the Intelligence Authorization Bill. As you probably know, several amendments are contemplated which, if enacted, would seriously hinder efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement to the conflict in Angola.

As you know, I am engaged in active diplomacy aimed at achieving a negotiated settlement. Foreign Minister Shevardnadze and I are seeking a negotiated settlement to the Angolan conflict. This is due in no small measure to Moscow's understanding, despite the enormous and continuing Soviet commitment to the Luanda regime, of American resolve on this issue. Likewise, some, but not all, MPLA leaders are beginning to realize that they cannot defeat UNITA militarily and must negotiate a settlement, despite the wishes of hardliners in Luanda who continue to seek a military solution. After four rounds of UNITA-MPLA direct talks facilitated by the Portuguese Government, our policy may be on the verge of success. For his part, Dr. Savimbi has been flexible and reasonable in his negotiating positions. Furthermore, he has been steadfast in his calls for free and fair multi-party elections in which UNITA is free to participate.

I firmly believe that Angola, like other regional conflicts, can be resolved through negotiations, if both sides have the incentive to talk and compromise. Our ongoing program is important to persuading the Angolan Government that a military solution to the conflict is not an option. I urge in the strongest possible way that you continue your solid support for this peace process by not endorsing legislative proposals which, although packaged as "compromises", actually would have the effect of undercutting those in the MPLA who want to negotiate and of strengthening the hand of the MPLA hardliners who want to continue the bloodshed.

Any imposition of conditional language will be taken by hardliners in Luanda as the ray of hope they have been looking for and long predicting. They will argue that the U.S. is preoccupied elsewhere, "short of breath," and willing to pull the rug out from under UNITA—and that there is thus no need for negotiations. This will only lengthen Angola's tragic war.

My view boils down to this: All Savimbi wants is a ceasefire and the ability to compete in fair and free multiparty elections. Some in the MPLA seem willing to move toward this peaceful, democratic approach as well. A vote to amend the Intelligence Committee's Angola provisions is a vote against this democratic solution at the absolutely worst time—and would be a vote for more killing, more stalemate, and more suffering.

Therefore, I ask that you strongly oppose any efforts to amend the Intelligence Authorization Bill with respect to Angola.

Sincerely yours,

JIM BAKER.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dellums amendment. I believe, as a majority of the committee does, that the best way to support peace, security, and freedom in Angola is to remain firm in our support for Dr. Savimbi and his freedom fighters.

For many years, we have heard the argument that support for UNITA would make the peace process impossible in Angola. That argument has been proven thoroughly and decisively wrong. Our policy is working—now is not the time to reward the hard liners in the Communist MPLA government of Angola on the floor of the House.

As the Washington Post recently editorialized:

To pull the plug on a southern Africa policy that has succeeded in other aspects and now seems near succeeding in Angola is perverse.

There is no reason to vote against the bipartisan provisions in the bill before us—no reason other than undercutting the prospects for a cease-fire and free elections in Angola.

We have heard about allegations of human rights violations by UNITA but these allegations have been refuted by our own Intelligence Committee. We should not let the real issue be clouded by those who have always opposed UNITA.

Secretary of State Baker put it clearly in a letter to me this week:

A vote to amend the Intelligence Committee's Angola provisions is a vote against this democratic solution at the absolutely worst time.

I urge my colleagues to support peace and freedom in Angola, and oppose any amendments to the bill reported by the Intelligence Committee.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my strong opposition to reauthorizing covert assistance for the rebel movement in Angola. I believe that America's active involvement in this 15-year-old civil war has contributed to a prolonged conflict that has taken the lives of over 200,000 innocent Angolans. I believe that this policy is morally bankrupt, ineffective, and should be discontinued.

The United States has financially backed UNITA since the repeal of the Clark Amendment in 1985. When South Africa could no longer maintain its support for UNITA, the Reagan administration stepped in to coordinate a covert program to stem the Soviet and Cuban advantage in the region. Now, after 5 years of escalating this policy, the plan has yielded only entrenched civil war and economic disaster for all Angolans.

The nature of the conflict has since changed, making U.S. objectives less clear. To date, 80 percent of the Cuban troops have pulled out of Angola.

The Soviet Union has committed to eliminating all military aid to the MPLA government. And the MPLA government has obligated itself to real democratic reforms that would include UNITA as a viable political party.

Despite the ambiguities of our objectives, however, the administration has still insisted on an increase in covert assistance. Despite the fact that this war is responsible for the world's largest amputee population and the globe's most acute famine, Mr. Bush remains intent to continue this ideologically driven policy.

Mr. Chairman, this cold war knee-jerk reaction is archaic. Such a policy would only work against our long-term objectives in southern Africa, and against our human rights goals worldwide. It is a policy that is ethically wrong and one that should change.

The Dellums amendment, however, is consistent with Angola's progress toward peace. It would discontinue all lethal assistance to the rebels and eliminate any incentive they have developed to avoid any further negotiation. The amendments responds in kind to the Soviet's commitment to end arms shipments to the MPLA, and signals our commitment to a lasting peace. The Dellums amendment would bring the debate on aid into an open forum and force the President to deal with this matter squarely.

The American people have exhausted 5 years funding an unprincipled policy that has only worked to extinguish life in Angola. It is time that we support a policy that would work to preserve it.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Dellums' amendment and vote in favor of peace.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, some speakers here today have told us: "Don't change United States policy in Angola—the Communist government is on the verge of collapse" or "Don't abandon the policy, it's about to succeed." These are not credible statements. United States policy has been successful "only if one is wiling to close your eyes to 14 years of incalcuable suffering in Angola.

Ask the Angolan children who have lost arms and legs by stepping on land mines that are placed along paths to the agricultural fields. Angola has the largest amputee population in the world. These children cannot tell you this policy is a success.

Ask the Angolan children who have lost both their parents in the war. This civil war has claimed 200,000 lives. They will not tell you current policy is a success.

The people of Angola have known only war for 29 years. First, the war was for independence from Portugal, then a factional conflict, then the 14-year war between the Government and UNITA. After these years of civil war, the Angolan people are deeply distrustful of both the Government and UNITA, and simply want peace. But they know it will not come easily. After 29 years, they know that more war and more foreign military aid is not the answer.

United States policy in Angola is not about to succeed. It is about to fail on a massive scale. Already 200,000 have died and many times that injured. Now 1.9 million people in Angola are at risk from the most severe famine in Africa, caused primarily by the lack of safe transport of foodstuffs due to the war. What is urgently needed to respond to the famine is a military cease-fire.

So the urgent question is how to best achieve a cease-fire. UNITA supporters make a paradoxical argument that the strongest pressure is on each side to reach a peace agreement by continuation of United States and Soviet aid. How can that be? Why do we think the fires of war would die as we continue to pour on gasoline? They wouldn't.

UNITA supporters make a second argument that a combined joint United States-Soviet cutoff would favor the Angolan Government over UNITA. How could that be? These are the same people who insist that the Soviets provide seven times the amount of United States aid. Why would a joint cutoff favor the Government? It wouldn't.

The real reason that UNITA supporters want to continue aid is because they think it will provide some military advantage that can be translated into bargaining leverage at the peace talks. As long as both sides in the war seek such leverage, there will be no peace. Both the Government and UNITA must abandon such tactics and commit themselves to a peace settlement. By cuting off United States and Soviet aid, we can strengthen the peace process.

In 1988, South Africa signed the Brazzaville accord and agreed to withdraw from Namibia and end lethal aid to UNITA. Since that time, the United States has filled the gap and become the principal sponsor of UNITA. According to a report of Africa Watch, causing incredible human suffering, both UNITA and the Angolan Government have engaged in gross violation of human rights. Under these conditions our country should not be funding either side in this way.

U.S. policy, in its current form does not promote peace. It is about funding, supplying, and conducting a war that has been waged largely against the civilian population of Angola. Today, we have an opportunity to end this policy. Please join me in supporting the Dellums amendment to end convert aid to UNITA or the Solarz amendment to condition it.

EXCERPT OF REPORT: "ANGOLA, VIOLATIONS OF THE LAWS OF WAR BY BOTH SIDES" BY AFRICA WATCH, DATED APRIL 1989

Africa Watch finds that:

UNITA and Angolan government forces (FAPLA) have engaged in gross violations of the laws of war causing deaths, injuries and great hardships to the civilian population.

UNITA has systematically and indiscriminately planted contact antipersonnel land mines in eastern Angola. Many are buried in footpaths to the fields or sources of water. Many civilians have been killed or maimed as a result.

FAPLA has engaged in the indiscriminate use of land mines in northern Angola. Some of these mines have been planted in the fields, and civilians have been killed or mained as a result.

UNITA has avowedly taken hundreds of foreigners as hostages for the express purposes of extracting concessions or recognition from their government, or for the purpose of exchanging them for UNITA prisoners held by the Angolan government.

UNITA has captured thousands of civilians and conscripted them to serve as combatants or to engage in unpaid agricultural labor.

The Angolan government has forcibly displaced thousands of civilians, in part to deny UNITA a social base.

FAPLA has indiscriminately attacked and killed civilians in UNITA dominated areas and has destroyed their homes.

UNITA has indiscriminately and deliberately attacked and killed civilians in government controlled areas.

UNITA has attacked medical facilities and burned civilian homes.

UNITA has attempted to starve civilians by capturing or killing civilians who tended their fields, by mining foot paths to fields, by sabotaging road transportation to cut off foods supplies, by cutting off food supplies to a town to "soften" it for attack, and by stealing food from the fields.

FAPLA soldiers in eastern Angola have stolen food from the fields.

UNITA has restricted the movements of civilians in areas that it occupies, confiscated food from them, and forced them to do unpaid labor for UNITA. In areas UNITA has abandoned, its troops have threatened to kill peasants when it returned if they were found living with (that is, growing food for) FAPLA troops.

FAPLA has sought to control the movements of peasants in some areas through a system of "safe conduct" passes. In some cases, FAPLA has required peasants to be accompanied by its soldiers to the fields.

Some peasants have fled their land and homes and sought refuge across the border because they feared threats and interrogation by both sides.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Dellums-Hamilton-Dymally amendment, which would end covert aid to the UNITA rebels in Angola. This is the key change which we must make to the intelligence authorization bill.

This amendment takes an important step toward crafting a more constructive policy toward Angola. I realize that my colleagues have widely differing views about the political issues in Angola, but I want to emphasize the humanitarian dimension of this debate. I support the amendment as a necessary measure to prevent further civil war, which endangers the delivery of food aid to millions of people now threatened by famine.

The United Nations estimates that 1.5 to 2 million Angolans will be threatened by famine in the next 6 months, the "hungry season" in southern Africa. The vulnerable populations are located in contested zones, as well as in areas controlled respectively by the MPLA Government of Angola and UNITA.

As usual, hunger knows no politics.

RESPONDING TO THE THREAT OF FAMINE

And responding to hunger should also put politics aside. That's what the House did last month when we passed a resolution calling on both adversaries in the Angolan civil war to put feeding hungry people above winning military battles. The measure urged both sides to cease hostilities and engage in meaningful peace negotiations.

That process is beginning to work. Through the good work of the Agency for International Development's Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance, the United Nations, and the Red Cross, food is beginning to reach hungry Angolans living in all food-short zones.

Now it's our turn to show some statesmanship ourselves.

Unless the United States can muster the kind of creative leadership that it has recently exercised in Europe, the Angolan civil war will rage on and famine will reap its grim reward. We need not and must not let this happen. Instead, we must work with the Soviet Union to obtain an immediate and mutual cutoff of military aid to our respective clients.

Some argue that we should do nothing and let the present negotiations take their course. I understand my colleagues' desire to see that the MPLA does not gain a tactical advantage. But people threatened by famine cannot be patient and neither should we. We have waited for 10 years for the present policy of covert aid to UNITA to bear fruit.

CHANGING COURSE

Now it's time to change course.

I believe that ending covert aid entirely would enhance the prospects for peace and eliminate a major obstacle to the secure passage of food aid to all vulnerable Angolans. We ought to proceed to an unfettered debate on aid to UNITA and then decide in what context whether military aid in fact advances democracy, peace, and food security.

I likewise agree with our distinguished colleague and the former intelligence committee chairman, LEE HAMILTON, that open debate must precede any decision about further aid to UNITA. And it is in that manner that we should assess Soviet intentions toward its own client.

WEIGHING THE RISKS

Admittedly, this approach carries the risk that we will not convince the Soviets to end aid to their MPLA client. But the greater risk is subjecting some 2 million Angolans to hunger or starvation. I submit that ending covert aid is a risk we must take.

Let's test the Soviet willingness to join us in a common search for peace and famine prevention—as we have in Ethiopia. Let's help advance a negotiated settlement to the Angolan civil war and prevent the scourge of another African famine.

Please support the Dellums-Hamilton-Dymally amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Mrs. JOHNSON and Messrs. SKELTON, TORRICELLI, and GUARINI changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. VALENTINE and Mr. PRICE changed their vote from "no" to "aye".

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Solarz amendment be limited to 40 minutes, with the time to be equally controlled and divided by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] and an opponent thereto.

Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment of Mrs. BOXER be limited to 60 minutes, with the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] and an opponent thereto.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. COLEMAN of Texas). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do so only for the purpose of finding out what is going on. I cannot hear what is going on.

□ 1850

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] repeat his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BEILENSON. In a sense, Mr. Chairman, there are two unanimous-consent requests.

The two unanimous-consent requests were for a total of 40 minutes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], the time to be equally divided and controlled by Mr. SOLARZ and opponent thereto; and a total of 60 minutes, 1 hour, on the amendment to be offered by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], the time to be equally divided, half of it to be controlled by a Member opposed.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how much time did the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] say on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ]?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BEILENSON. A total of 40 minutes, 20 on each side.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have an amendment at the desk, an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

Would the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] explain to me what time would be allotted to my amendment?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman , will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BEILENSON. Neither this gentleman, nor, I think, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] is aware of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I was not aware that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] was going to proceed with his amendment. If he is, I would suggest that the unanimous-consent request be amended to provide that for the purpose of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] to my amendment, perhaps 10 minutes be set aside for debate, 5 minutes on each side.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, that would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I would so amend my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman further yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. That is 10 minutes in addition to the 40 minutes on the main amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair needs to be clear about the time. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] will restate his unanimous consent request after withdrawing the one he has just offered. The Chair will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I think what the gentleman is requesting at this point is 40 minutes, the time to be equally divided on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

With an additional 10 minutes, that time to be equally divided on an amendment thereto to be offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER]; and a total of 1 hour, the time to be equally divided on the amendment to be offered by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire whether or not the limitation would apply to the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] as well, and any amendments thereto.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would just like to ask if it is clear that the Boxer amendment would have 1 hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by me and 30 minutes to be controlled by a Member who opposes the Boxer amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BOXER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, that is what this gentleman said.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, that would be fine with the maker of the amendment if it is agreed to by the body.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is attempting to ascertain whether or not there are any amendments to the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], and, if there are, whether or not that would be required to come out of that 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, we do not know of any amendments to the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER]. Some of us hope there will be no amendments to Mrs. BOXER's amendment, but, if there were——

The CHAIRMAN. But if there were?

Mr. BEILENSON. Our unanimous-consent request would have to come out of the time of 1 hour.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, because there are so many members who wish to speak on this side, I am having difficulty keeping it to 30 minutes, but I will absolutely do that. If there are additional amendments, I would appreciate it perhaps if we could suggest that amendments to the Boxer amendment be handled within 10 minutes, and I would make that unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I would second the request of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER]. If there are amendments to her amendment, they should be given an additional 10 minutes, 5 minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. To include all amendments?

Mr. BEILENSON. Each amendment to her amendment. We do not anticipate any such amendments.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the unanimous-consent request.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SOLARZ

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SOLARZ: Page 25, after line 18, add the following:

TITLE VI—INCENTIVES FOR PEACE IN ANGOLA

SEC. 601. ENCOURAGING REDUCTIONS IN EXTERNAL ASSISTANCE TO PARTIES TO THE ANGOLAN CONFLICT.

(a) PROHIBITION ON ASSISTANCE.—

(1) PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATION.—If the Government of Angola expresses its willingness to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement to the conflict in Angola and proposes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate, the President shall promptly so certify to the appropriate committees.

(2) ASSISTANCE PROHIBITED PURSUANT TO CERTIFICATION OR JOINT RESOLUTION.—Except as provided in subsections (b), (c), and (d), if the President makes the certification described in paragraph (1) or if the Congress enacts a joint resolution declaring that the Congress has made the determination with respect to the Government of Angola that is described in that paragraph, then—

(A) intelligence community funds may not be obligated or expended during fiscal year 1991 for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola; and

(B) the United States shall suspend, or cause the suspension of, the delivery to UNITA of any weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment acquired with any intelligence community funds that may have been previously expended, to the extent that the United States retains the ability to suspend such deliveries.

(b) REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION IF THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA IS NO LONGER PURSUING A POLITICAL SOLUTION.—Except as provided in subsection (e), in the event the President has made the certification described in subsection (a)(1) or the Congress has enacted the joint resolution described in subsection (a)(2), subsection (a)(2) shall cease to apply if the President certifies to the appropriate committees that the Government of Angola is no longer willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement and is no longer proposing a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate. A certification may be made under this subsection only during the 3-month period beginning on the date on which the President made his certification under subsection (a)(1) or the Congress enacted a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2), as the case may be.

(c) CONDITIONS FOR REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION AFTER 3 MONTHS.—Should subsection (a)(2) become applicable pursuant a President certification under subsection (a)(1) or enactment of a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2) or (e), subsection (a)(2) shall cease to apply, subject to subsection (e), if the President certifies to the appropriate committees (after the end of the 3-month period specified in the last sentence of this subsection) that he has made the determinations required by both paragraphs (1) and (2), as follows:

(1) DETERMINATIONS WITH REGARD TO THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA.—A determination either—

(A) that the Government of Angola refuses to participate in good faith in negotiations for a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate;

(B) that—

(i) during the review period, the Soviet Union or other sources outside Angola sold or otherwise made available to the Government of Angola additional, militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment, or

(ii) prior to the end of the review period, the Government of Angola had not ceased receiving militarily significant amounts of lethal military equipment that had previously been sold or otherwise made available by sources outside Angola; or

(C) that the Government of Angola or the Government of Cuba is not complying with its obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement.

(2) DETERMINATIONS WITH REGARD TO UNITA.—A determination both—

(A) that UNITA has expressed its willingness to participate in good faith in negotiations for a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections; and

(B) that—

(i) sources outside Angola did not sell or otherwise make available to UNITA during the review period additional, militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment; and

(ii) prior to the end of the review period, UNITA had ceased receiving militarily significant amounts of lethal military equipment that had previously been sold or otherwise made available by sources outside Angola.

A certification may be made under this subsection only after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date on which the President made his certification under subsection (a)(1) or the Congress enacted a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2), as the case may be; except that if the Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving a certification submitted by the President under this subsection, the President may not make another certification under this subsection until after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date of enactment of that joint resolution.

(d) REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION IF THERE IS A MILITARY OFFENSIVE AGAINST UNITA.—Subsection (a) and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (f) shall cease to apply if the President certifies to the appropriate committees that—

(1) the Government of Angola has launched a military offensive that threatens the survival of UNITA, or

(2) there is clear and credible evidence of a military build-up by the Government of Angola that makes it likely that a military offense that would threaten the survival of UNITA will occur.

(e) CONGRESSIONAL DISAPPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—If the Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving a certification submitted by the President under subsection (b), (c), or (d), then subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (a)(2) shall apply for the remainder of fiscal year 1991 unless the President subsequently makes a certification under subsection (c) or (d).

(f) LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNTS OF UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE.—

(1) ASSISTANCE DURING FIRST QUARTER OF FISCAL YEAR.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated during the period beginning October 1, 1990, and ending December 31, 1990, for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount which is 25 percent of the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990 or during fiscal year 1991, whichever is less.

(2) ASSISTANCE DURING FIRST HALF OF FISCAL YEAR.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated during the period beginning October 1, 1990, and ending March 31, 1991, for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount which is 50 percent of the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990 or during fiscal year 1991, whichever is less.

(3) ASSISTANCE DURING ENTIRE FISCAL YEAR.—The aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated at any time during fiscal year 1991 for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990.

(g) REPORTS ON MILITARY ASSISTANCE DELIVERIES, COMMITMENTS TO MULTIPARTY DEMOCRACY, AND COMPLIANCE WITH CUBAN TROOP WITHDRAWAL AGREEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—On November 1, 1990, January 1, 1991, April 1, 1991, and July 1, 1991, the President shall submit to the appropriate committees a report—

(A) on the extent to which the Government of Angola is continuing to obtain militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment from foreign countries or other third parties;

(B) on the extent to which UNITA is continuing to obtain militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment from foreign countries or other third parties;

(C) on the extent to which the Government of Angola is willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate;

(D) on the extent to which UNITA is willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections; and

(E) on whether the Government of Angola and the Government of Cuba are complying with their obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement.

(2) CERTIFICATION TO BE INCLUDED.—Unless the President has already made the certification described in subsection (a)(1) or the Congress has enacted a joint resolution described in subsection (a)(2), the President shall certify in each report submitted pursuant to paragraph (1) whether the Government of Angola has expressed its willingness to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement to the conflict in Angola and has proposed a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate. If the President certifies pursuant to this paragraph that the Government of Angola has expressed such a willingness and proposed such a timetable, that certification shall be considered to be a certification under subsection (a)(1).

(3) DESCRIPTION OF UNITED STATES EFFORTS.—The report required by paragraph (1) shall also describe the President's efforts—

(A) to obtain agreement by foreign countries and other third parties to terminate assistance to the Government of Angola and UNITA for the acquisition of militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment; and

(B) to encourage both the Government of Angola and UNITA to agree to a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections.

(4) REPORT WITH CERTIFICATION.—If the President makes a certification under subsection (a)(1), (b), (c), or (d), the President shall include with that certification a report containing the information specified in paragraphs (1) and (3) of this subsection and the justification for the President's certification.

(h) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) the term "appropriate committees" means the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate;

(2) the term "intelligence community funds" means funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, or any other agency or entity of the United States involved in intelligence activities;

(3) the term "obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement" means the obligations relating to the calendar for redeployment and withdrawal of Cuban troops as specified in the Agreement Between the Governments of the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Cuba for the Termination of the International Mission of the Cuban Military Contingent, signed at the United Nations on December 22, 1988;

(4) the term "review period" means the period beginning on the date the President makes a certification under subsection (a)(1) or a joint resolution is enacted under subsection (a)(2) or (e), as the case may be, and ending on the date on which the President makes a certification under subsection (c); and

(5) the term "UNITA" means the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair repeat what the time limitations are?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] by saying that the gentleman offering the amendment has 20 minutes, a Member opposed to the amendment has 20 minutes and, in the event of an amendment to the amendment, as expected by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER], it will be permitted 10 minutes total time, 5 minutes on each side.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, is that true as well on the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] now is to relate to the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER]. If offered, the gentlewoman's amendment would be permitted to be debated for 60 minutes, 30 minutes on each side.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to control the opposition time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will permit the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] to control 20 minutes. The gentleman from illinois will be recognized for 20 minutes following the yielding of time or the use of time by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Chairman, we have just gone through an interesting and illuminating debate on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] which has revealed the existence of significant divisions in the House over how best to advance fundamental American interests and ideals in Angola. On the one hand, there are those Members who clearly believe that the provisions of American assistance to UNITA is both inappropriate and even counterproductive. On the other, there are those Members who believe with equal conviction that the continuation of American assistance to UNITA is essential if we are going to bring about a negotiated settlement of the conflict in that country consistent with the aspirations of the Angolan people for genuine peace and democracy.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is designed to create a consensus in the Congress to facilitate an end to the fighting and the holding of free and fair multiparty elections through a negotiated political settlement, and is based on the notion that we are always most effective abroad when we are united at home.

The amendment which I have offered has been cosponsored by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE], the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], and myself on our side of the aisle, and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MORRISON], the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOUGHTON], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] on the other side of the aisle. It is, I believe, an amendment which most Members should be able to support, regardless of the position they took on the Dellums amendment.

Let me explain what this amendment is all about. The amendment would permit a continuation of any lethal aid we may be providing to UNITA, unless and until President Bush reports to the Congress that the MPLA has put forward a proposal for the holding, within a reasonable period of time, of multiparliamentary elections in which UNITA would be able to participate, and that the MPLA is also prepared in principle to accept a cease-fire.

In the event the President makes such a report to the Congress, any lethal aid we are providing to UNITA, not the relief aid, but lethal assistance only, would be suspended for a period of 3 months. At the end of 3 months, if the MPLA has reneged on its commitment to free and fair elections, if the Cuban forces are not continuing to withdraw from Angola, and if the MPLA is still receiving arms from the Soviet Union, or from any other source, the prohibition on lethal aid to UNITA would be lifted and the lethal assistance could not be provided.

Consequently, under the terms of this amendment, if the MPLA is unwilling to commit itself to a reasonable timetable for free and fair elections and a cease-fire, lethal aid can go forward. Mr. Savimbi will not have lost a cent, and there will be no prohibition on American assistance, even for 3 months. But if the MPLA does make that commitment, if the MPLA does agree to a cease-fire and a reasonable timetable for free and fair elections, which is exactly what Mr. Savimbi and Secretary of State Baker say is essential in order to get a negotiated settlement of the conflict, then the aid could not be provided.

Now, what is wrong with this amendment? Someone objected on the grounds that if the MPLA makes a commitment to free and fair elections and a cease-fire and we prohibit lethal assistance to Mr. Savimbi, the MPLA might launch a major offensive to wipe UNITA out in the interim.

Not to worry, because the amendment provides that if there is a major offensive during the 3-month period when lethal aid is prohibited—if it is prohibited—the President can unilaterally provide lethal assistance to UNITA.

Another good friend on the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON], said "supposing they haven't launched a major offensive, but are stockpiling arms with which to launch a major offensive."

Not to worry. We responded to his concerns and put in a provision which enables the President to provide lethal aid to UNITA even if they have not launched a major offensive against UNITA, if the MPLA is even stockpiling weapons for that purpose.

The main objection to this amendment insofar as I can understand it has been the argument advanced by the Department of State that the adoption of this amendment will somehow preclude or prevent a negotiated settlement of the conflict because it will play into the hands of the so-called hard liners within the MPLA who do not want a settlement.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to Members of the House that I do not know if there are hard liners and soft liners in Luanda, but let us assume for the purposes of this debate there are. I cannot for a moment conceive of how anybody can say that this amendment would play into the hands of the hard liners. If it plays into anyone's hands, it plays into the hands of the soft liners in the MPLA, because this amendment will enable the soft liners in the MPLA to say to the hard liners that if they want lethal American assistance to Savimbi to be prohibited, they have to agree to enable the government of Angola to put forward a proposal for free and fair elections within a reasonable period of time, which is exactly what the MPLA has so far not been willing to do.

If the members of the MPLA politburo can read English, or if they can read Portuguese, and I have here a Portuguese translation of my amendment, there is no risk whatsoever that the adoption of this amendment will play into the hands of the hard liners.

Mr. Chairman, I would like my friends on the other side of the aisle who may oppose this amendment to explain exactly how it would play into the hands of the hard liners, when what the amendment says is that if the hard liners want lethal aid to Savimbi prohibited, the way they can achieve it is to agree to put forward a proposal for free and fair elections within a reasonable period of time.

So I would say this amendment does just the opposite. I would say to Members in the House that after 15 years of civil war, after the death of over 200,000 Angolans directly, and up to half a million as a result of this conflict, after trying a cutoff in aid, as we did with the Clark amendment, and after trying several years of unrestricted aid, as we have been doing until now, the time has come for a somewhat different approach—an approach that is reasonable, an approach that is moderate, an approach which enjoys support on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted, we have very little to lose. But, potentially, we have a lot to gain. If the MPLA does not agree to a free and fair election within a reasonable period of time, lethal aid can be provided; Savimbi does not suffer a bit.

If they do agree to a timetable for free and fair elections, which is exactly what we want them to do, which is exactly what Mr. Savimbi said is needed in order to get a political settlement, we prohibit lethal assistance for 3 months—during which only nonlethal aid could continue. At the end of the 3 months, if there is an overall agreement, Savimbi does not need lethal assistance. If there is not an agreement and the MPLA is getting arms from the Soviet Union, or the Cubans are not withdrawing, or the MPLA has reneged on their commitment to free and fair elections, lethal aid can be provided.

The Soviet Union has said if we stop our military aid to Savimbi, they will stop their military aid to the MPLA. I should think that would be in everyone's interest.

We heard earlier in the debate from my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], about how much assistance the Soviet Union is giving to the MPLA. He said $500 million last year.

I am not at liberty to disclose the amount of money there may be for UNITA in the classified section of this bill, but it is far, far less than what the Soviet Union is giving the MPLA.

So let us put the Soviets to the test. Let us put the MPLA to the test. I agree with my friends on the other side of the aisle that if this war is going to end, it will not be ended with a military victory by either side. The only way it will be ended is through a political settlement.

I say to my friends on the other side of the aisle that in order to end it with a political settlement, the MPLA is going to have to be much more specific than it has been on its willingness to have a free and fair election within a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Chairman, they have said they are ready for a multiparty election, but they have left it very vague when that election will be held. This amendment puts the spotlight right on Luanda. It says to the MPLA, if you want lethal assistance to Savimbi prohibited, come forward with a reasonable timetable.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is a moderate approach. It is a reasonable approach. I think it can bring us together. Let me say, in conclusion, we are always more effective abroad when we are united at home. This is the way to bring unity to the House, and I urge Members to support this amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am frank to confess that you need to be a Ph.D. in astrophysics to understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ]. This is the fourth version we have had to digest since he first offered it a few days ago, and it was turned down by the Intelligence Committee.

The Solarz language is a maze, and you have to, as I say, be very gifted to understand it. But the effect is very simple, a de facto cutoff in lethal aid to UNITA.

Mr. SOLARZ is enamored of the phrase "put the Soviets to the test." God, why do they not put us to the test once in a while? Cut out aid to the Communists and see if we will. Let us try that for a change.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], as a prognosticator, has not got a flawless record. I remember in 1976 when I was sitting around here in my first term, and I saw the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] take the floor, and he said, and I have always carried it with me, in the car since then, he said, "I believe there are areas in the world in which we have a legitimate interest in curbing the spreading of Soviet influence, but I don't believe Angola is one of them."

Here we are today, 15 years later, worrying about the Communists in Angola, because back then you said if we would stop aiding the faction of UNITA, the Communists would just go away. Well, they did not just go away. They stayed there, and they stayed there, and they dug in so that we finally had to repudiate the Clark amendment, and here we are back again creating this maze, this Rubik's cube of foreign policy.

There are not any conditions the MPLA has to satisfy before the President is required to make a certification that will result in a cutoff at lethal aid. To satisfy the conditions under the Solarz amendment, the MPLA simply has to express, now get this, its "willingness" to accept a cease-fire and a political settlement.

Well, they have already said they are willing to, they just never get around to doing it. They have not done it, and they are not going to do it, and they canceled a meeting 2 days ago waiting to see how this vote turns out.

Let us put them to the test. I am weary of putting the Soviets to the test. I am weary of putting the Sandanistas to the test. They are still flunking the test.

Now if the President refuses to certify that the MPLA has met the above conditions, then the Solarz amendment permits Congress to make the determination itself by passing a joint resolution. This is called the urge to regulate. This is called becoming the Secretary of State with a vengeance.

If I were to go through the qualifications and the pages in the Solarz amendment, Members would go to sleep, as some Members are already within my scan.

Let me just tell Members this: The Solarz amendment requires four Presidential reports, four, that must satisfy two pages of requirements. Now that is really astrophysics. I think that is incredible.

Someone once said the President and Mr. Baker have been doing pretty well in Europe, pretty well in foreign policy, pretty well in the Middle East, and pretty well around the world getting international cooperation. Let us let them do it. That is what their jobs are, and we have got enough to do over here worrying about the budget.

This is a complicated, Rube Goldberg, intrusive, unworkable plan that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] thinks we have to submit to. It is the fourth version we have had. I know there is a fifty lurking around somewhere.

But I just plead with Members, let us continue working with UNITA, and with the MPLA, with the Portuguese. Let us not change the equation. Let us not put the Soviets to the test. Let them put us to the test and withdraw all of the arms they have left there, take the Cuban arms out that are there, and say let us have peace. That could be done tonight.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Solarz amendment and I associate myself with the comments of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I am highly complimented, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my very good friend from the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOUGHTON].

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I am never sure what remarks do at this particular hour of the evening, whether it changes any minds or not. However, I want to tell Members how I feel about this amendment.

I think it is a good amendment. I think the time has come for a change, and I support it.

The arguments against are very persuasive. It is at a sensitive time, do not disrupt the talks, the United States and the U.S.S.R. have technical advisers there, so let things be as they are. I do not want to try to practice diplomacy without a license. However, the facts are these: The talks are not succeeding, and the reason is that there always is a fall-back position for one side or the other because they can get arms.

Another fact is the cold war is over. The military solution is stalemated. The United States and the U.S.S.R. both want to disengage, and the Angolan Government is ready to do a variety of things, agree to a cease-fire, a market economy, get rid of the Cubans, and have no new arms supplies coming from the Soviet Union.

So here comes the Solarz amendment, and it asks only two things. Just stop, and also have 3 months testing with a thing called a triple zero option. If the Government cheats, all bets are off. And even if the amendment passes, the President has the right to say no, I want to do another thing.

I have been around a long time, and I have never seen a deal like that. And do you know what, Mr. Savimbi has not either, and he was the one that agreed a few weeks ago that it was a good idea. Now he is gradually backing off because he not only wants to win, but he thinks he can win with a bigger score.

But you ask why is this good for us, why is this good for the United States, the paymaster? One thing is clear as we move through this crazy world of ours and some of the international negotiations in which we have been involved. You cannot shoot your way to the negotiating table. So if it was "yes" to Nicaragua, why can it not be "yes" to Angola?

I support the Solarz amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, this is not a compromise. It prompts a withdrawal of UNITA aid on the promise of a cease-fire and a negotiated settlement. Once promised, UNITA gets nothing more for 3 months, but the promise is hollow. The MPLA has $5 billion in oil revenues. They have gotten $500 million from the Soviets this year. They have a 15-year arms stockpile.

The UNITA people are already starving because of the refusal of the MPLA to distribute food, and the MPLA has promised a cease-fire and elections for years now. A 3-month hiatus or even a brief suspension of aid to UNITA will put UNITA at a significant disadvantage, making them horribly vulnerable to the wrongful intentions of the MPLA.

So this is a gamble. It is a dangerous gamble, and it is a cutoff of the aid which could kill UNITA.

Let us have a cease-fire, but let us have it now, not later. Let us have free and fair elections, but let us have them soon, not later.

Savimbi has already said he will go along with this, so why not the MPLA? Let us not gamble with a successful policy that we have implemented at this time.

The MPLA can end the war, today. We should not. Vote down the Solarz amendment.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, in Angola, as in many parts of the world, the end of the cold war provides an opportunity to examine policies that have their roots in significantly different times. The Angolan civil war has been for far too long a test of wills between not only the immediate participants, but their respective backers as well. Over the course of two administrations, we have heard that United States support for UNITA was essential if Soviet expansionism was to be thwarted and a diplomatic settlement achieved.

Now, it seems to me, is the time to move beyond the military stalemate which exists on the battlefield and concentrate on the suddenly more promising arena of the negotiating table. Recent expressions by both the Government of Angola and UNITA give some cause for optimism that each side is prepared to rule out a military solution to the conflict. We should encourage those developments and the apparent willingness of the Soviets to play a more constructive diplomatic role on Angola by adopting a new approach in our own policy.

Such an approach is embodied in the Solar amendment which seeks to further a negotiated political solution without prejudicing the interests of either party. The amendment establishes a means by which to measure the professed desire of both UNITA and the Angolan Government for a peaceful settlement, and provides sufficient inducements to encourage good faith efforts to find the compromises necessary to work out a settlement. It is an evenhanded approach to a problem that has at least up to this point seemed to be beyond the ability of any of the interested parties to solve.

By turning the focus of the debate away from conflict and toward negotiation, the Solarz amendment can hasten the necessary process of national reconciliation in Angola. Millions of Angolans now face the threat of famine and the deprivation which accompanies it. Their needs cannot be addressed adequately until the fighting stops. Accomplishing that should be the primary goal of U.S. policy, and I believe the Solarz amendment would contribute to that result.

Mr. Chairman, Congress has been on the periphery of the Angolan debate for the last 5 years. It is time that the issue of U.S. policy in southern Africa was squarely presented to this body. The Solarz amendment provides an opportunity for a much needed discussion of this issue while at the same time seeking to sustain a commitment to the negotiating process on the part of the parties most directly concerned with the outcome of the Angolan civil war. I urge that the amendment be adopted.

□ 1920

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HEFLEY].

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, we have said everything I think that can be said on Angola this afternoon in the lengthy debate.

This is an important issue. The gentleman earlier in this afternoon said that this is not a laughing matter. Indeed, it is not a laughing matter. It is not a matter, either, of consideration about whether the cold war is over. That has been said a lot this afternoon.

These people are not interested at all in the cold war. They are interested in a very hot war that they are living through, and I think all of our goals are the same. We want the war to stop, and we want them to have freedom, and we want them to be able to go in a multiparty sense to the ballot box and to elect the people to represent them and govern them.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss with the Members of the Chamber just for a few moments about what would happen if we cut off aid to UNITA. First and foremost, there would be no hope of a multiparty system and free and fair elections. The MPLA would then have the perfect reason to break off peace negotiations, because it would know that it could not win on the battlefield if aid to UNITA will be virtually helpless, and the MPLA would be able to strike with force ending all hope of democracy in Angola, and oppressive Marxist rule will continue to drive Angola toward ruin.

Some argue that if the Soviet Union would stop aid to the MPLA the United States would stop aid to the UNITA, and it would facilitate the peace talks. This is the farthest thing from the truth. I would only facilitate war for the same reasons mentioned earlier. UNITA's position would be immediately weakened while the MPLA has enough weapons and supplies stockpiled, and we have heard it over and over this afternoon, 15 years' supply to sustain the fighting for years.

The point is, cutting aid to UNITA is not the solution. We would be pulling the tug out from under any progress which has been made.

The only reason the MPLA and UNITA are at the talking table is because of the support we have given UNITA, not because the MPLA has suddenly had a change of heart, and peace and democracy is sweeping in southern Africa, and it is because the MPLA cannot win while the U.S. supports UNITA.

The only victory is at the bargaining table.

Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to one day not have to send aid to UNITA. However, that aid must continue until there have been free and fair elections and peace and a multiparty system exists in Angola.

I strongly urge my colleagues to reject this proposal or any proposal which restricts or stops U.S. aid to UNITA. This is not the time to send a wishy-washy signal that UNITA's friend, the United States, is weak in our resolve to help.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I approached this debate with a little bit of trepidation, because I worked with my colleague from New York on the draft of the amendment, and we thought we might be able to get someplace on it, but, unfortunately, it did not work out.

Mr. Chairman, there was an article in the Washington Post, and the last part of the article said:

> To pull the plug on a policy that was failing might be understandable. To pull the plug on a southern Africa policy that has succeeded in other aspects and now seems near succeeding in Angola is perverse.

I think that is a very important point to be made. The Angolan policy we have pursued is starting to bear fruit, and I think it is bad to change that policy right now when it appears as though we may be on the verge of an agreement.

The legislation the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] has brought before us today is still a little bit ambiguous. When he says the Government of Angola expresses its willingness, that just is too vague in my view. If it said there is a definite time for a cease-fire, a definite time for elections, some kind of a definite timetable, it would have a lot more merit than the bill we have before us right now.

Let me just say this, and I think this is extremely important, I have seen a marked change in the attitude of the Government of Angola in the last year, the Communist government.

In the last year for the first time, I have seen the ambassador from Angola starting to come into the offices of members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and members of the Intelligence Committee offices to talk about some kind of a conclusion to this terrible debacle over there. After that, I noticed the Ambassador came back a second time but this time he was with the Foreign Minister of Angola and one of the generals in charge of the conflict. So they started talking a little bit more about a solution rather than continued conflict.

Then most recently there was a television communication from the President of Angola himself. Mr. dos Santos addressed a number of us in Congress and answered our questions.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBEST].

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Very rapidly, what I would like to do is just address one specific part of a lot of the arguments against aid to UNITA for a number of years, and that has been the human rights violations that supposedly have occurred there.

To anyone who might be having their heart tugged by this issue, I want to mention as quickly as I can in a matter of 2 minutes some things that offset this. One of those is this picture which was made last week. It shows, as we all know, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] here, along with two gentlemen who supposedly were dead. These gentlemen happened to be very well alive, and either there has been a miracle that has taken place in the last few days or there were some gross inaccuracies in earlier reports.

There was an indication of burning of witches, people who, in fact, had been so-called dissidents who were declared as witches and burned. The individual who alleged that story recanted his allegations in a telephone interview in which he said he had never had eyewitness confirmations of any of his charges. He did see it happen and cannot say, "with my hand on my heart that that happened." They were rumors of UNITA dissidents. "When you are a dissident, you believe anything."

One other, I think, very important factor, Mr. Chairman, Savimbi has repeatedly welcomed international independent investigations into the country. Let me read from a letter that he wrote to the chairman of the Human Rights Watch:

> UNITA regrets that your organization chose to issue a report concerning human rights in Angola without ever setting foot in the country. The MPLA regime refused to let representatives of your organization into its territory. However, Human Rights Watch never requested entry into free Angola and only informed UNITA of the human rights report a week before it was issued. Please accept this letter as a formal invitation for your organization to visit the area under UNITA's control in order to make conclusions more representative of the reality instead of focusing solely on two small towns and on people who do not live in the country.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], my fellow member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that both sides, UNITA and the MPLA, want to work this thing out and want peace. This is the essence of the amendment. Congress suspends aid for 3 months, once the Luanda regime comes up with a realistic election proposal. There has to be incentive, but this is a stopgap solution.

What we have to look at is the longer range. Does it really make any sense to continue a program rooted in the strategic assumptions of a different era? Mr. Chairman, this approach is exactly the way we did the bipartisan agreement in Nicaragua with incentives for peace.

This amendment, modeled after the successful approach Congress took to the crisis in Nicaragua, applies incentives to cease hostilities to both parties involved in the Angolan conflict.

The amendment also builds on the developing cooperation with the Soviet Union. This cooperation led to the decolonization and independence of Namibia.

The war between the MPLA and UNITA has lasted over 15 years and taken the lives of some 200,000 people, many civilians not involved in the conflict.

Furthermore, the lives of nearly 2 million Angolans are threatened by drought. Relief shipments have been severely impeded by the civil war.

By creating an incentive program which encourages both sides of the conflict, and the United States and Soviets, to put down their weapons and pursue a cease-fire. This is the first step toward establishing a multiparty system and democracy in Angola.

While supporters of continued military aid argue that we must keep UNITA strong in order to reach an agreement/ignore that the amendment includes provisions to protect UNITA from an MPLA offensive. The amendment states that:

Should an MPLA offensive, or the potential for an MPLA offensive, exist the President may pursue a lethal aid program for UNITA.

This amendment puts the onus on the Angolan Government. If they do not provide a timetable for settlement and negotiate in bad faith, our aid to UNITA would be unimpeded.

This amendment addresses the real and legitimate concerns of both sides of the issue. I urge its passage.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 11, 1990]

UNDERWRITING ANGOLA'S AGONY

Angola's civil war lingers on, a stubborn relic of the cold war—despite efforts by Moscow and Washington to end it. Fifteen bloody years have claimed 200,000 lives. The warring camps say they're willing to submit to elections, but cannot agree on when and how. The least Congress can do is give President Bush the authority to suspend covert aid to Angola's rebels the moment Angola's Government fixes an election timetable.

This idea, advanced by Representative Stephen Solarz and six colleagues, gives both sides an incentive to bargain. It's vastly preferable to a Senate bill that simply authorizes continued aid to UNITA insurgents led by Jonas Savimbi. Even better would be an immediate suspension of aid, to be resumed only if the Angolan Government rejects a reasonable election timetable. Covert aid makes less and less sense, given the emerging prospects for peace in all of southern Africa.

A reluctant and divided Congress was persuaded to help Mr. Savimbi several years ago when the Soviet bloc was pouring huge amounts of aid into the Marxist Angolan regime. Angola's civil war was then entwined with a parallel struggle in Namibia involving insurgents and South African troops. Since then, however, Namibia has won its independence, a huge Cuban force in Angola has begun to withdraw and African mediators have pressed for a cease-fire and elections.

It's difficult to fix blame for the deadlock. Angola has offered to stop receiving all foreign military aid if the UNITA rebels do likewise, which may only be a feint. Mr. Savimbi contends he's eager to take part in elections. But negotiations have gone nowhere. Meantime, drought and war threaten to starve hundreds of thousands of Angolans, the voiceless victims of an increasingly pointless conflict.

As Mr. Solarz proposes, Congress can now suspend aid for three months once the Luanda regime comes up with a realistic election proposal. But this is at best a stopgap. Does it really make any sense to continue an aid program rooted in the strategic assumptions of a different era? This is the deeper question that Congress and the Administration have not yet begun to address.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, it is very clear to me that this amendment is a real mistake. I have just come from a meeting with the Foreign Minister of Vietnam, Nguyen Co Thach, in which we talked about Cambodia. I cannot help but think about the events we are trying to bring about in Cambodia to have a supreme national council bring about free and fair elections. An article in the New York Times, written by the author of this amendment, talks about that situation, and I believe it relates very closely to Angola. He says:

Nor should we risk undermining the whole negotiating process at this delicate juncture by cutting off our nonlethal assistance to the non-Communist resistance. That would greatly diminish the pressure on the Vietnam and the Hun Sen government to make the concessions needed to achieve a settlement.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I think it is very important for Members, on October 19, in Luanda, the Deputy Foreign Minister, Venancio de Moura, announced UNITA-backed idea of establishing a multiparty system in Angola. It is very clear that full support to UNITA is absolutely essential if we are going to bring about a successful resolution to this crisis.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished and extremely able chairman of the Subcommittee on Africa, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Solarz amendment.

As I indicated earlier, during debate over the Dellums-Dymally-Hamilton amendment, U.S. assistance to Jonas Savimbi is a tragically misguided policy, grounded in anachronistic cold war mythology. It adds significantly to Angola's staggering human misery, indulges the worst militaristic tendencies of UNITA, and reinforces widely shared suspicions that the true aim of United States policy is not the promotion of a pluralist, multiparty democracy in Angola, but rather the armed overthrow of the Angolan Government and the installation of a substitute regime; namely, that of Jonas Savimbi.

Mr. Chairman, U.S. policy must change. If Congress cannot at this moment put a complete halt to assistance to UNITA, then Congress should condition that assistance in the way that my colleague, Congressman SOLARZ, proposes. Only by pursuing a new, far more evenhanded policy offering carrots and sticks to both warring parties will United States policy truly begin to advance the peace process in Angola.

Mr. Chairman, the administration, in opposing the Solarz amendment, has turned to a familiar, conveniently timed argument to justify unconditional military support of Jonas Savimbi, at a reported level of $60 million in fiscal year 1991.

We are told by Secretary Baker, Assistant Secretary Cohen, and others that, as a function of United States diplomacy, United States cooperation with the Soviets, and administration resolve in supporting UNITA militarily, negotiations between UNITA and the Angolan Government are now at the edge of a major breakthrough.

This is an unconvincing line of reasoning.

Sixteen months ago, at the time of the Gbadolite summit, when the relevant committees in Congress questioned why, in a post-cold-war era, the administration should unconditionally support UNITA, high-ranking State Department officials argued: "The policy is working. Give us time. Don't force us to change course now. In just a short period, this war will be brought to a negotiated conclusion." Those were the words of the administration then, they are the same words used today.

What resulted from giving the administration the benefit of the doubt?

Savimbi walked out of the peace process initiated at Gbadolite. The war resumed, with large scale military actions undertaken by both sides. The senseless killing and suffering of innocent Angolans continued. Famine created by protracted war and drought only worsened, to the point where almost 2 million Angolans will soon be at risk of starvation. In the meantime, the administration rejected repeated Soviet overtures to the administration to begin mutual cutbacks in external military flows to their respective clients.

Mr. Chairman, the truth of the matter is that while there has been some limited, recent advance in negotiations between the Angolan Government and UNITA, it is a very incomplete progress which falls far short of a major breakthrough. And what progress has taken place has occurred despite the narrow approach of the administration.

The Angolan Government and UNITA have met, face-to-face, in four rounds of exploratory talks. Yet the most important factor promoting these negotiations is not United States aid to UNITA; it is that the Angolan Government and UNITA have lost much of their external military support in the last 2 years.

The Angolan Government has witnessed the withdrawal of three quarters of its Cuban forces; all will have departed by June 1991. In addition, Soviet military aid has dropped from an estimated $1.4 billion in 1988 to $500 million in 1990.

UNITA has lost almost all of its South African aid, which up to April 1989 exceeded $200 million annually, more than three times the reported size of the United States program. Nor can UNITA relay any longer on South African forces to intervene directly in Angola on its behalf.

But despite these changes, the Angolan Government and UNITA still remain mired in profound distrust and bitterness. The Angolan Government resists recognizing UNITA and presenting a timetable for elections, for its fears that UNITA, with the military backing of the administration, is not truly prepared to lay down its arms and reach a nonmilitary, negotiated settlement. UNITA, for its part, resists agreeing to a cease-fire, for it fears that the Angolan Government, with continued Soviet military backing, is not truly serious about recognizing UNITA and agreeing to free and fair elections.

In the midst of this deadlock, the Angolan Government and UNITA each continue to rely overwhelmingly upon military might, in the vain hope that by bludgeoning the other side through one more round of fighting, it can improve its military position before compromising politically. Tragically, continued external military flows only feed this terrible dynamic.

Mr. Chairman, some dramatic step is required to push UNITA and the Angolan Government out of their deadlock. This war has gone on too long. Angola has experienced enough weapons, enough ammunition, enough senseless death and suffering.

UNITA's President Savimbi has openly said that UNITA is prepared to cease fighting, if the Angola Government recognizes UNITA and presents a reasonable timetable for multiparty elections. The Angolan Government has indicated it is willing to move in the direction demanded by UNITA, if it has a reasonable hope that UNITA will turn away from warfare. Fair enough. Let's force each party to live up to its commitments, by adopting the Solarz amendment.

If we adopt the Solarz amendment, we will test the true intentions of UNITA and the Angolan Government, while also testing the Soviets' openly expressed desire to cooperate with the United States in ending all external military flows to Angola.

If we do not adopt the Solarz amendment, more time will pass, more opportunities for United States-Soviet collaboration will pass by, and I fear that, this time next year, we will again hear how close we are to a breakthrough and a final settlement.

I urge support for the Solarz amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McEWEN].

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Chairman, I would especially like to express my admiration for the chairman of the Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], and our ranking member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], as well as our previous chairman from Cleveland, and the members that serve on this committee because they do our country a great service.

There is a reason why the Committee on Intelligence rejected this amendment, and there is a reason why the Washington Post editorialized it. It is because it is a very pernicious amendment. It tells Members that we should have put in a government that is Marxist oriented, and that it will behave well.

Let me share with Members what the makers of this amendment told Members previously, because we have history. In 1974 when the FNLA supported by the Chinese, and the MPLA then supported by the Soviet Union, and UNITA, supported by the democracy of the world were about to close in one the capital, this Congress at just about Christmastime 1975 passed an amendment that cut off all aid to the freedom forces when they were within sight of the lights of Luanda, the capital city. Then we came back in January to make this amendment permanent, and the mover of the amendment said:

> The real issue is not whether we withdraw from the world but whether we choose to involve ourselves in what is in essence a tribally based struggle, the outcome of which is ultimately unrelated to our own national security.
> We are told that, if the MPLA is triumphant in Angola, it will result in the establishment of a Soviet satellite in that area, but the fact is that the tides of nationalism run far stronger in Africa than the imperatives of ideology. Having just managed to extricate themselves from the clutches of the Portuguese, the Angolans are most unlikely to submit themselves to the domination of the Soviets. Even if the MPLA is triumphant—and that is something nobody can be sure of—the Russians are unlikely to have any more influence in Angola than they now have in Mozambique, in Algeria, or in Egypt. And these are countries where they spent substantially more money than they are now spending in Angola.
> I believe there are areas in the world in which we have a legitimate interest in curbing the spreading of Soviet influence, but I do not believe Angola is among them.
> Mr. Speaker, we are also told that a triumph by the MPLA would result in the establishment of a Soviet naval base in South West Africa. According to these diplomatic Dr. Strangeloves, the establishment of such a naval facility in Angola or South West Africa would give the Russians the capacity effectively to interdict any shipping emanating from the Persian Gulf and destined for the east coast of the United States or for Western Europe. But the fact is that the place to establish such a blockage is at the exit of the Persian Gulf, in the Indian Ocean, rather than in the wideopen sea lanes of the Atlantic Ocean.

Let me share something. We should cut off aid to the freedom forces because it can only serve to, only seek to force the MPLA to seek assistance from the Soviet Union, if we will withdraw our aid from the freedom forces, they would not do that. We have history to tell Members what the result has been.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York. While I believe that his intentions are good, this amendment is quite complicated, and it would end up sending a wrong signal to the wrong people.

In short, Mr. Chairman, it would hinder efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement in Angola, and that is really what we want to achieve. The recent record at the negotiating table shows that UNITA has been negotiating in good faith and has sought three basic objectives: explicit mutual recognition between itself and the ruling MPLA government; and a reversable commitment by both sides to internationally supervised multiparty elections; and a cease-fire.

UNITA has made the following concessions in its efforts to resolve the conflict in Angola. It has recognized the Marxist regime, the MPLA has the Government of Angola and has recognized the country's president, and it has called for elections to be held by late 1991, and has accepted the MPLA position that the current government should remain in power until elections are held.

Further, it has reduced the pace of fighting on the part of its forces, in an effort to promote a cease-fire. By contrast, Mr. Chairman, the MPLA response to UNITA's concessions has been less than encouraging. While the Government of Angola has made some concessions in the four rounds of peace talks that have taken place thus far this year, it has done only so in general terms. It has been unwilling to recognize UNITA as a legitimate political party or to make a commitment to holding elections on a specific date. That is terribly important for Members to remember.

One hopeful development in the negotiations concerns the role that the United States and the Soviet Union have assumed as observers of the negotiations. This addition to the talks, moderated by the Portuguese Government, should help push the negotiations forward. Indeed, Dr. Leonid Fituni, of the Institute for African Studies for the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences has written that expectations in Luanda are mounting that there will be a workable agreement with UNITA by January 1991. Elsewhere, the Angolan Government has finally agreed to allow an international relief effort through Namibia to assist drought victims in southern Angola. For this decision, UNITA has actually congratulated the MPLA for having collaborated in this humanitarian operation.

American policy, Mr. Chairman, in southern Africa has shown results over the past few years. Namibia is independent. The Cubans have started going home. Negotiations between the two sides in Angola are finally making progress. The amount of aid has served the crucial purpose of reinforcing the military stalemate, and making possible negotiations aimed at a political settlement.

Now is not the time to change a policy that is on the verge of attaining its objectives in Angola. Placing conditions on the one side that has shown flexibility and a willingness to compromise in the ongoing negotiations is simply wrong and even perverse.

Let me quote from a letter that Secretary of State Baker sent a number of us about the issue before us today. He writes:

. . . Some, but not all, MPLA leaders are beginning to realize that they cannot defeat UNITA militarily and must negotiate a settlement, despite the wishes of hardliners in Luanda who seek a military solution. . . . . legislative proposals . . . packaged as "compromises", actually would have the effect of undercutting those in the MPLA who want to negotiate and of strengthening the hand of the MPLA hardliners who want to continue the bloodshed.

Secretary Baker further notes that:

Any imposition of conditional language will be taken by hardliners in Luanda as the ray of hope they have been looking for and long predicting.

I hope the Members of this body will see fit to hold to the course that the intelligence committee, with all the facts at its disposal, chose to chart. I respectfully ask you, my colleagues, to vote down the Solarz amendment.

□ 1940

The policy is working. We should remember it is working and to put it off track would be a disservice to both parties.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER].

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, consider this very possible scenario. First the MPLA expresses a willingness—that is the word—willingness to hold elections and have a cease-fire.

Second, the President complies with this amendment, if it were to be passed, and cuts off lethal aid.

Third, the MPLA waits 2 months and then launches a massive offensive against UNITA.

Our dear colleague tells us not to worry. If that were to occur, we can resume aid, but Mr. Chairman, those of us who have been on the Intelligence Committee have had a lot of experience with the problems of starting and stopping and starting again the resupply of aid. We have had experience with it in Central America. We have had experience with it for years in Afghanistan and we have had experience with it in Africa.

I can tell you categorically, and I do not believe any of my colleagues will disagree with this, that once you stop aid, it takes weeks, if not months, to restart that aid.

We could find ourselves in a situation where the MPLA was overrunning UNITA, where UNITA was facing defeat and we would be too little, too late, and we would see the forces of freedom defeated by this Marxist government in Angola.

Now, our friends tell us, well, the Soviets say they will stop aid if we stop aid. Well, that is nice, but that is something for our Secretary of State and Secretary Shevardnadze to negotiate. Let us not play Secretary of State here in the Congress. Let us let that be negotiated, if indeed that is a possibility.

And most of all, let us remember the words that I quoted earlier tonight of Felix Dzerzhinsky, the founder of the KGB, who said:

The West are wishful thinkers. We will give them what they want to think.

Let us not be conned by the Communists in Angola. Let us recognize that it is easy for them to make promises in order to get their way. Let us support UNITA. Let us support Jonas Savimbi until and unless we see that there are firm commitments to free and fair elections, firm commitments to a cutoff of the war, firm commitments to a cease-fire. By doing that we will be supporting freedom and opposing Marxist dictatorship in Africa.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of concluding this debate, I yield the remaining time to the very distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], the chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Solarz amendment.

Reports of progress in the negotiations between UNITA and the Government of Angola provide some reason for optimism that a political settlement of the Angolan civil war may be possible in the near future. I believe that it is time to capitalize on both the spirit of compromise recently evidenced in these negotiations, and the apparent willingness of the Soviet Union, to play a more positive role in resolving the Angolan issue.

I personally favor a policy which combines an incentive for the Government of Angola to agree to the essentials for peace—the adoption of a cease-fire, and a commitment to a timetable for multiparty elections—with appropriate protection for the position of UNITA. Neither side gains an advantage for delay under such an approach, while each is rewarded for constructive efforts to achieve a political settlement.

Mr. Chairman, we have accomplished much of what we set out to do in Angola. The withdrawal of Cuban troops is on schedule, and the Soviets are showing an interest in disengaging from their costly support of the Government in Luanda.

We need to encourage the process of national reconciliation so that the urgent needs of the people of Angola, especially those threatened with famine, can be addressed. That country has been ravaged by civil war for 15 years now. Its people are tired of the fighting, its economy destroyed by it.

It is time for us to help end the war, and to help Angola fulfill its potential to become one of the most economically healthy countries of Africa. It has oil, coffee, diamonds, timber, and fish. What it needs to have is peace.

I believe that the Solarz amendment provides a positive framework for encouraging a peaceful resolution of the Angola conflict, and I support it.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the Solarz amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF WASHINGTON TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SOLARZ

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Washington to the amendment offered by Mr. SOLARZ: On page 1, on line 10, after "participate," insert the following: "and is no longer receiving aid from the Soviet Union,".

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me say that I have the greatest respect for my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York, and I respect what he is trying to do to encourage the peace process in Angola, but I believe there is one very serious flaw in his approach.

The Solarz amendment provides for a cutoff of United States aid if the Angolan Government express a willingness to agree to a cease-fire and agrees to a timetable for a political settlement and elections; however, Soviet military aid continues—that is the flaw.

The result of the Solarz amendment is that the Soviet Union, which has pumped in and continues to pump in at least 10 times as much military aid as the United States, will continue its military aid, while the United States will stop its military aid.

We do want to encourage negotiations and elections. However, as I look back on the last several years of our negotiations with the Soviet Union, where we have achieved some significant arms reduction agreements, they did not come about Mr. Chairman, through the United States agreeing or saying we would unilaterally make reductions or concessions. They came about because the two nations put into effect agreements.

It is for that reason that I offer the amendment to the Solarz amendment to make sure that not only are we on the way to a cease-fire and a political settlement with elections in Angola, but that we are on the way to ending military aid, that is ending military aid by the Soviet Union at the same time as the United States is agreeing to cut off military aid.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me, because I think we may be able to find a basis to come together on this amendment.

In the gentleman's amendment, when the gentleman refers to aid from the Soviet Union, do I take it to mean the gentleman is referring to lethal military assistance?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Referring to military aid, that includes equipment, weapons, ammunition, and military advisors.

Mr. SOLARZ. The gentleman is not referring to nonmilitary assistance?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. No.

Mr. SOLARZ. Let me ask the gentleman one other question, if he will yield further.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. In the event we were to accept the gentleman's amendment as he has explained it, would the gentleman from Washington be prepared to join the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOUGHTON] in supporting the main amendment?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I would be prepared to if the amendment was accepted with the interpretation and explanation that I have given. If we can get the Soviet Union to stop sending military equipment, ammunition, weapons, and to withdraw their military advisers, then along with getting the willingness for a cease-fire and a political settlement and fair elections, I think then we are on the way to encouraging a truly peaceful fair and democratic settlement in Angola.

Mr. SOLARZ. If the gentleman will yield further—and I thank him for his explanation and constructive efforts to improve the amendment—I say to my good friend from the State of Washington that just as we accepted some suggestions by the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO], to broaden the base of support for the amendment, just as we accepted a suggestion from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] to broaden the base of support for the amendment, so too will we accept the amendment offered by my very good friend, the gentleman from the State of Washington [Mr. MILLER] to further broaden the base of support for the amendment.

I only hope that when the vote comes on the final amendment, that my very good friend from the State of Washington will be able to bring some of his other friends on that side of the aisle along with him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] has expired.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ] supports the amendment. So should the 5 minutes not go to some Member who might oppose the amendment?

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, should not a Member in opposition to the amendment be given the 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I know my colleague from Washington is well intentioned and his amendment on the surface has merit. The problem I have with the amendment is that it is a Trojan horse. It is going to make a resolution which is going to cause much, much mischief and problems for the resolution of this conflict to look a little better.

So I just say to my colleagues that I think that the path we are on toward peace in Angola is a path that should not be deviated from at this particular point. If this amendment makes this legislation look better and entices some of my colleagues to vote for it and it passes, then I think it is going to cause real problems for the peace process.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, I want to go on record in the strongest terms as opposing this well-intentioned amendment because there are so many things wrong with it. It does not say one thing about 1,200 Soviet personnel who are now moving to the front lines. It does not say anything about Cuban weapons which are in abundance there. It does not say anything about the stockpile already in place, 15 years' worth of it. It does not say anything about who is going to monitor whether the Soviets are receiving aid. Are we going to get onsite inspection? Will the United Nations be there?

The problem with this is that it ought to be part of a comprehensive cease-fire with monitors in place so we will know it is being honestly lived up to. Once more, it is "trust me, trust me."

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHUSTER].

Mr. SHUSTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I simply concur with the gentleman's point. This is one more complexity added to an already vague and complex amendment. It does nothing to cure the situation. I imagine it might pass by voice vote here. But the real issue is the Solarz amendment, with or without this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Solarz amendment, with or without this amendment, should be defeated.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, this is whipped cream over shaving cream; it does not taste very good. It looks all right, but there is no way to monitor it. It does not demand a cease-fire, it just says they are no longer receiving aid.

How are we going to find out? From their representative at the United Nations?

The State Department says at this critical stage of negotiations, when our policy appears to be on the verge of success, any change in our policy would send the wrong signal to all the parties, including the Portuguese mediators, and probably prolong the conflict rather than bring it to a peaceful conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Washington, well-intentioned, but misguided though he be.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank my well-intentioned, albeit perhaps misguided colleague, for yielding, but two responses.

The gentleman raises the question of advisers. In the definition of aid and in the colloquy that we just had, I explained and the other side accepted that aid included not only weapons, ammunition and equipment, but the advisers that the gentleman is talking about.

Second, the gentleman said how will it be monitored? If you look at the Solarz amendment, the title of this paragraph is "Presidential Certification." The President of the United States, our President, the friend of my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, has to certify that this has happened. I call that pretty good monitoring.

Mr. HYDE. If the gentleman is through, does the gentleman mean the President is going to go over there in Air Force One and land in Luanda and see if the Soviets are still sending military aid?

The gentleman has something that looks nice, but it sends the wrong signal at the wrong time, and it is a terrible mistake and I am sorry that the gentleman offered it.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 213, noes 200, not voting 20, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MRS. BOXER

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. BOXER: Page 25, after line 18, insert the following new title:

TITLE VI—OVERSIGHT OF INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 601. CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 501 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 413) is amended to read as follows:

"CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT

"SEC. 501. (a) The President shall ensure that the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'intelligence committees') are kept fully and currently informed of the intelligence activities of the United States, including any significant anticipated intelligence activities, as required by this title, except that—

"(1) nothing contained in this title shall be construed as requiring the approval of the intelligence committees as a condition precedent to the initiation of intelligence gathering activities. Initiation of covert actions shall require prior approval of the intelligence committees; and

"(2) nothing contained in this title shall be construed as conferring on the President any of the powers enumerated in the Constitution as reserved to the Congress, particularly the power to declare war, Const. Art. I, Sec. 8, Cl. 11; to raise and support military forces, Const. Art. I, Sec. 8., Cl. 12; to appropriate funds, Const. Art. I, Sec. 9., Cl. 7; nor as limiting the foreign policy powers enumerated in the Constitution as reserved to the President, particularly the power to act as Commander in Chief of the armed forces once Congress has declared war, Const. Art. II, Sec. 2., Cl. 1; and the power to make treaties, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Const. Art. II, Sec. 2., cl. 2.

"(b) The President, upon being made aware of any allegations of illegal intelligence activity, shall immediately report such allegations to the intelligence committees and keep the intelligence committees informed of the ongoing investigations into such activities, such reports to encompass any measures taken to prevent a recurrence of such illegal activity, including the reporting of such activity to the Department of Justice for prosecution.

"(c) The President and the intelligence committees shall each establish procedures as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title, including procedures to ensure that each is kept fully and currently informed of intelligence activities.

"(d) The House of Representatives and the Senate, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, shall each establish, by rule or resolution of such House, procedures to ensure that all members of the Congress are informed regarding intelligence activities to the extent consistent with the need to protect from unauthorized disclosure classified information and information relating to intelligence sources and methods furnished to the intelligence committees or to Members of Congress under this title. In accordance with such procedures, each of the intelligence committees shall promptly call to the attention of its respective House, or to any appropriate committee or committees of its respective House, any matter relating to intelligence activities requiring the attention of such House or such committee or committees.

"(e) As used in this section, the term 'intelligence activities' includes 'covert actions', as defined in section 503(e)."

(b) INFORMATION REQUIRED TO BE DISCLOSED; FINDINGS.—The National Security Act of 1947 is amended—

(1) by redesignating sections 502 and 503 as sections 505 and 506, respectively; and

(2) by inserting after section 501 the following:

"REPORTING INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 502. To the extent consistent with due regard for the protection from unauthorized disclosure of classified information relating to sensitive intelligence sources and methods, the President shall—

"(1) keep the intelligence committees fully and currently informed of all intelligence activities which are the responsibility of, are engaged in by, or are carried out for or on behalf of the United States Government, including any significant anticipated intelligence activity and significant failures; and

"(2) furnish the intelligence committees any information or material concerning intelligence activities which is within their custody or control and which is requested by either of the intelligence committees in order to carry out its authorized responsibilities.

"APPROVAL AND REPORTING OF COVERT ACTIONS

"SEC. 503. (a) In setting forth the procedures regulating covert actions, this title shall not be construed as authorizing the use of covert operations as a routine means of conducting foreign policy or achieving foreign policy objectives.

"(b) The President may not conduct covert actions without prior approval by the intelligence committees, except as set forth in subsection (c)(6).

"(c) Approval of a covert action by the intelligence committees shall be predicated on the following:

"(1) The preparation of and delivery to the intelligence committees by the President of a written finding establishing that the covert action is necessary to meet an extraordinary threat to the national security of the United States and detailing the covert action proposed, the purposes of the action, the means by which the action is intended to be carried out, and the Federal agency, agencies, or personnel to be used in the covert action.

"(2) The covert action does not propose, intend, or otherwise include the use of any third party to fund or conduct the operation, be such third party a foreign country or any agent thereof, private contractor, or other entity which is not an element of the United States Government.

"(3) The covert action does not propose, intend, or otherwise include the use of any department, agency, or entity of the United States Government other than United States intelligence agencies, the Department of Defense, and Federal law enforcement agencies.

"(4) The covert action does not propose, intend, or otherwise result in the influencing of United States political processes, public opinion, policies, or media.

"(5) The covert action does not propose, intend, or otherwise include actions which violate the Constitution of the United States, any treaties, such as the United Nations Charter, which under the Constitution are the Supreme Law of the Land, Const. Art. VI, cl. 2, or any statutes of the United States.

"(6) The approval by the intelligence committees of each covert action must be obtained in writing before the covert action can commence, except that the President may under extraordinary and emergency conditions, when time is of the essence, initiate a covert action prior to receiving approval from the intelligence committees, but such covert action shall cease within 48 hours of initiation unless express written approval of the covert action is given by the intelligence committees pursuant to such procedures as the intelligence committees may adopt to ensure a prompt response in such circumstances.

"(d) The President shall—

"(1) keep the intelligence committees fully and currently informed of the status of all covert actions which are carried out for or on behalf of the United States Government, including significant failures;

"(2) furnish to the intelligence committees any information or material concerning covert actions which is in the possession, custody, or control of the executive branch and which is requested by either of the intelligence committees; and

"(3) ensure that the intelligence committees are notified within 24 hours of any significant change in a previously approved covert action, including any change in the nature or scope of the threat which the covert action was designed to counter.

"(e) As used in this section, the term 'covert action' means an activity or activities conducted by the United States Government to meet an extraordinary threat to the national security of the United States so that the role of the United States Government is not intended to be apparent or acknowledged publicly, but does not include—

"(1) activities to protect United States citizens from imminent bodily harm or from being seized or held as a hostage;

"(2) activities the primary purpose of which is to acquire intelligence, traditional counterintelligence activities, traditional activities to improve or maintain the operational security of the United States Government programs, or administrative activities;

"(3) traditional diplomatic or military activities or routine support to such activities;

"(4) traditional law enforcement activities conducted by the United States Government law enforcement agencies or routine support to such activities; or

"(5) activities to provide routine support to the covert activities (other than activities described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4)) of other United States Government agencies abroad.

"PENALTIES FOR VIOLATION

"SEC. 504. Any person who knowingly initiates or participates in a covert action in violation of this title shall be guilty of a felony punishable by up to 20 years in Federal prison, a fine of $100,000, or both.".

(c) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS SUBJECT TO CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL.—Section 505 of the National Security Act of 1947, as designated by subsection (b)(1), is amended—

(1) by striking out "501" in subsection (a)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof "503"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) No appropriated funds may be obligated or expended, or may be directed to be obligated or expended, for any covert actions, as defined in section 503(e), until such time as the intelligence committees have given express written approval of the covert action in accordance with section 503(c).".

Mrs. BOXER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the Boxer amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point or order.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the amendment violates clause 7 of rule XVI which states, in pertinent part, "* * * no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment." The proposed amendment is not germane to the bill because it deals with matters beyond the scope of the bill's provisions and the changes in law, and we would say that this is absolutely germane.

My goodness, we are talking about covert activities, and certainly the Intelligence Committee, and it is hard for me to believe that someone could say that a discussion of covert activities in this particular amendment would not be germane to the intelligence authorization bill.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized very briefly?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BEILENSON. He does, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to be heard very, very briefly on the point of order.

I recognize the right of the gentleman, of course, to make this point of order and, in fact, I do not know how the Chair will rule on the precedents which the gentleman from Illinois has cited. I would only ask that in its ruling the Chair consider the fact that there are already provisions in the bill which do broaden its scope.

Take into consideration the fact that the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] has amended her amendment this very day, I think in a good faith effort to try to assure its germaneness. And I would also urge that the desire of many Members to debate the issue raised by the amendment be noted.

There is not agreement in the House that the amendment would result in an improvement in the existing system of intelligence oversight. I believe, however, that the amendment's consideration would offer an opportunity to the Intelligence Committee to correct many of the misconceptions that have been raised recently in the role Congress plays in monitoring activities of the intelligence agencies, and I would hope that the ruling of the Chair would in some way acknowledge the value of that kind of debate.

I thank the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NELSON of Florida). Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

The Chair is prepared to rule.

Although the bill does not amend the National Security Act of 1947, neither does it confine itself to authorities and activities of the intelligence community. In addition to the changes in permanent law already noted, at section 503 the bill inserts new provisions in title 10 of the United States Code—relating to the Armed Forces—to ensure congressional oversight of activities of the Department of Defense in commercial cover of intelligence operations.

Thus, the subject matter of the amendment—the relationship between the executive branch and the Congress with respect to the authorities and activities of the intelligence community—is one of the diverse topics already addressed in the bill.

Accordingly, the point of order is overruled.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California is not germane to the bill. The amendment adds a new title and must be germane to the bill as a whole, as amended.

The bill authorizes funding for the intelligence community for 1 fiscal year and makes several, diverse changes in permanent law relating to sundry authorities of the Central Intelligence Agency and the Department of Defense. For example, the bill makes changes in the CIA retirement and disability system; it authorizes the Secretary of Defense to permit components of DOD to charge the CIA the same rate for airlift services that they would charge another component of DOD: and it authorizes the Secretary of Defense to withhold certain geodetic products from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act. In addition, the bill, as perfected, includes the amendment recommended by the Committee on Armed Services directing the Secretary of Defense to provide Members of Congress access to a classified report of the Defense Intelligence Agency assessing efforts to account for military personnel listed as prisoners of war or missing in action.

The amendment at the desk does not repeal the Hughes-Ryan law, but does amend title V of the National Security Act of 1947—relating to accountability for intelligence activities. Among other things, it assigns to the President several responsibilities of the type that the existing act assigns to lower officials, such as the Director of Central Intelligence.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask one question?

Mr. Chairman, I did not hear that part, what the Chair read about the criminal penalties that she inserts in the law, and my point that that should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, that it is certainly beyond the scope of our bill.

I must have missed that. How did the Chair rule on that, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the bill, as presented and amended contains provisions within several committee jurisdictions. Therefore the amendment need not meet a strict jurisdictional test. Accordingly, the Chair rules that the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, this gentleman is opposed to the gentlewoman's amendment and asks that he control the 30 minutes in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the Chair for upholding the germaneness of this amendment, and I want to thank the very gracious chairman of the Intelligence Committee who opposed this amendment but yet fought hard for my right to offer it.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment gives the Intelligence Committees of Congress a more important role in covert activity decisions by requiring their approval before a covert activity is undertaken. In doing so, this amendment protects the American people from the possible abuses of an all-too-powerful or overreaching executive branch.

I would like to read to my colleagues from the Senate Committee on Intelligence report on the Iran-Contra affair. This is the Senate and the House committee report, starting on page 11.

Findings and conclusions: The common ingredients of the Iran/Contra policies were secrecy, deception, and disdain for the law. A small group of senior officials believed that they alone knew what was right. They viewed knowledge of their actions by others in the Government as a threat to their objectives. They told neither the Secretary of State, the Congress, nor the American people of their actions. When exposure was threatened, they destroyed official documents, and they lied to Cabinet officials, to the public, and to elected representatives in Congress.

Going on, I go on to page 12:

The United States simultaneously pursued two contradictory foreign policies, a public one and a secret one.

And, further,

The Iran-Contra affair was characterized by pervasive dishonesty and inordinate secrecy. Secrecy became an obsession. Congress was never informed of the Iran or Contra covert actions.

Mr. Chairman, they go on to say, and, Mr. Chairman, I know it is hard to relive some of the horrors of the Iran-Contra scandal, but I think it is important, because it really is what my amendment addresses.

Further, on page 16 of the report:

Covert operations of this Government should only be directed and conducted by the trained professional services that are accountable to the President and to Congress. Such operations should never be delegated as they were here to private citizens in order to evade governmental restrictions.

And, finally, the committee ends in this way:

The President is the principal architect of foreign policy in consultation with the Congress. The policies of the United States cannot succeed unless the President and the Congress work together.

Mr. Chairman, we must learn from the history of the Iran-Contra scandal lest we see it repeated over and over again. We read in this report that keeping secrets from our Intelligence Committees is wrong, that asking private parties who can oftentimes be crooked or greedy or worse is wrong, that consultation with our Intelligence Committees is correct, that checks and balances are correct, that Congress, working with the President, not just being a rubberstamp, is correct.

This Congress is a great institution. Are we unwieldy at times? Yes. Are we contentious at times? Absolutely.

But this is the House of the people, and the people count on us, expect us to make policy through our committee system to check the unbridled power of the executive.

I think it is important that you know that this bill that is before us is silent on the whole area of covert activities. However, the Senate has an entire section spelling out the way covert activities would be authorized, and it is very important that we speak out on this issue my colleagues, because pretty soon they are going to go to conference, and if we have not discussed this, then neither the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] nor the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] nor any of the conferees will know how we feel.

Section 7 in the Senate bill says that covert activities can be carried out for virtually any foreign-policy objective at all, and all that is necessary is notification by the President to the committees, but there is a loophole in this notification process. On a rare occasion, and I put quotes around rare because those are the words, if the President cannot notify Congress before the covert activity begins, he must do so in a timely manner.

"Timely" is not defined in the Senate bill. Conceivably it would be a week. It could be a month. Maybe it could even be a year. So, in essence, the role of Congress in a covert action is limited to notification by the President to the intelligence committees, a written rationale for the action which is important and, in certain cases, no notification until the President thinks it is timely.

The Senate language would allow all agencies of government to participate in covert activities, as well as foreign countries and other third parties.

Members, I ask, have we learned anything from the Iran-Contra scandal? Have we not learned that the Congress was kept totally in the dark? Have we not learned that when funding for the Contras was banned by the Congress, people in the Reagan-Bush administration turned to third parties such as Iranian arms merchants and other foreign nationals, to accomplish their secret plan?

I believe the American people should insist on the checks and balances of a stronger congressional role. The need to know that this Congress through our Intelligence Committees is not only notified but consulted.

(By unanimous consent Mrs. BOXER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mrs. BOXER. That the Congress is not only told but is asked. They need to know that covert activities will take place not as an ordinary part of foreign policy, but when our national security absolutely demands it. They need to know that third parties and other nations will not be carrying out our covert policies. And most of all, they have to know and feel confident that their tax dollars are being spent wisely, not on some secret plan hatched in the dark recesses of their Government, or worse, in the dark recesses of some privately run CIA operation.

Let me tell Members what the Boxer amendment does not do. It does not affect intelligence gathering operations or stop Members from getting the intelligence operation on a Qadhafi or a Saddam Hussein. It does not prevent Members from consulting with foreign countries about covert actions, and it does not prevent foreign countries from paralleling our cover actions. It certainly does not require any consultation for hostage rescue.

What it does, very clearly my friends, is say that this Congress, through its intelligence committees, needs to play a role of approval. We have a loophole. If there is an emergency, we give the administration 48 hours to come forward before that approval is given. I urge this body to learn from history, to stand up for the American people and their right to a fair and just Government, to make sure that a tyrannical few cannot undermine the greatest Nation on Earth.

We are a Government of laws, not of men and women. Therefore, we must write laws that protect our people from the abuse of power. Nothing less than their freedom is at stake.

Members, if we are here for anything, it is to protect the freedom of the people we represent. I urge support of the Boxer amendment.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to our distinguished ranking member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I have heard Iran-Contra since 1986, and I thought Congress did pretty well. We had a House Special Investigating Committee, and boy, did we have investigators. The Senate had a Special Investigating Committee, and did they have counsel and investigators. We spent the summer with hearings. We subpoenaed everybody, all records. We granted immunity to everybody in town. Testify, go before the public.

Then we got a special prosecutor, I guess independent counsel is what he is called. I do not know what counsel he made except prosecute, indict, and he did; 28 million dollars' worth. He got a couple of people. Not enormously big fish, but he has gotten them. The others, he had gotten one on appeal, the other one got reversed, but we have had the newspapers. We have had Congress. We have had the courts. We have had all sorts of investigations, and an election has intervened in between them. A couple of elections as a matter of fact.

I hope we have learned the lessons of Iran-Contra. I hope we have drawn conclusions from that the Congress should not be lied to. There is a penalty paid for lying, if a person is not granted immunity first by Congress. And then life goes on. But, no, it does not.

Mrs. BOXER has brought out of the bowels of the Cristic Institute this complicated amendment which says, as a matter of fact, no covert actions, ever, regardless of special circumstances involving sensitivity and risk to life without prior notice to Congress. Do Members know how we can keep a secret? Don't Members know our lips are sealed? Members never find out the next day in the Washington Post or the New York Times what is going on.

Members have never. Why? Our battle plans are not revealed. What our submarines are doing, what we are doing in the Philippines, they never find that out. We are tight as a drum. I am proud of that fact. We do not even need an oath of secrecy in the Committee on Intelligence. We do not even take an oath of secrecy. We are honor-bound not to leak, and we do not live by the press release or by being stroked by the media. Not at all. "What did you do today? How much are you giving Angola? We know it, we just want to confirm it. We heard it from the other side" and on and on and on, but I am digressing.

The gentlewoman from California has imposed an enormous power that I stand in awe of. She has rewritten the Constitution. Now get this; she says, "Nothing contained in this title shall be construed as conferring on the President any of the powers enumerated in the Constitution as reserved to the Congress." I will buy that, particularly the power to declare war. I will buy that.

Now she goes on and she says, "nor as limiting the foreign policy powers enumerated in the Constitution as reserved to the President, particularly the power to act as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces, once Congress has declared war." She phases in the Presidential constitutional power as Commander-in-Chief to only be effected after Congress has declared war. That is wonderful if we can do it. Whoever drafted this has, as I say, broad scope, is a visionary, and has rewritten the Constitution to suit himself.

Covert actions, they have redefined covert action, too. So it takes a Philadelphia lawyer to understand what is covert and what is not.

Now, hostage rescues are no longer covert, so the President can do that and not have to confer with Members. They say, great secret keepers in advance. That is fine. Now, if a third country ever wants to work with the United States, if we need to get help from somebody else, no can do under her bill.

It is just a terrible imposition, a terribly inflexible, dangerous, unrealistic rule that she is imposing. It is one last dying gasp for those people who died very hard over Iran-Contra, and never did get to Ronald Reagan, but nunc pro tunc, as the lawyers say, now for then.

We have this amendment. I hope this is defeated. We have crippled the State Department. We have crippled the CIA enough tonight, and let Members not put the lid on the coffin.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 seconds to say to the gentleman that I find it amazing that it is inflexible and dangerous to give the Intelligence Committees more power.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the senior member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of the Boxer amendment. I cannot say that it is technically legal or parliamentarily perfect or not, nor can I say that the chances of it ultimately becoming law are more than very slight. However, it does one thing. It does get to the heart of the matter. Even more so than the 3 hours that we spent on Angola, because it is a question, the principle involved here. The question of policy is so profound, so significant, that really all other questions we have debated today pale in comparison.

It has to do with the relevancy, really, of the Committee on Intelligence, raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] earlier. How relevant is our committee? It has to do with whether or not Congress can make any meaningful contribution in terms of national security or international security questions. What is our limitation?

Now, I say this, knowing that since I have been on the Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Intelligence has been operating in a number of years under what I consider superb chairmanship, including the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Boland, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], and now my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON]. That is not the problem. The problem is our constitutional limitation, our total inability to do anything more than to listen up in room H-405. When proposals are made by the executive branch, you listen to them. We cannot speak of them. We cannot effectively challenge them. There is no vote, normally, on those propositions, and there is no third-party interest.

Except in the most rare instances, we hear from the intelligence agencies only and the executive branch on these proposals.

There are ways, it has been pointed out, that could be challenged. We could, and it was once done by a former Member, Mr. Boland, challenge Central American policy; very painful, very difficult, once in recent years.

We can with this particular vehicle, the authorization bill which contains money, although we customarily as you know do not, we can challenge certain policies. Today we have in two or three particulars, mostly by Members not now members of the Intelligence Committee.

Iran-Contra, cited by the gentlewoman from San Francisco, is very much in point. We have seen Judge Walsh give up the prosecution this last week. We have seen little come of it because the juxtaposition of the executive branch and the Congress is at a terrible disadvantage to the Congress. We literally have been unable, we cannot even get a suitable notice provision out of Iran-Contra. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCHUGH] has worked desperately hard for 3 years, frustrated at every point, to get a notice provision. You would think we could at least get that out of the scandal of the executive branch in terms of a national security question, and we cannot.

So I say a vote for the gentlewoman's amendment is a vote for a new look at how Congress and the executive branch can handle intelligence in the 1990's.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I rise in opposition to the gentlewoman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I understand the desire of my colleagues, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] and those who support her amendment to ensure the congressional oversight of intelligence activities is as strong as possible. That is a goal which the members of the Intelligence Committee share. In fact, it was the primary reason for the creation of these committees 13 years ago.

Congress currently has in place effective tools for conducting oversight of the operation of our intelligence activities. These tools which are applicable to covert action programs, as well as to all other intelligence activities, include regular monitoring by the intelligence Committee of the conduct of ongoing programs and the exercise by our committee and the Committee on Appropriations of the power of the purse.

One of the results of the Intelligence Committee's use over the past few years of the authority it has over funding decisions has been a significant reduction in the amount of money available to initiate covert actions, which I believe has had the effect of ensuring a much more judicious approach in decisions by the President as to when to apply that particular foreign policy tool.

Obviously, improvements could be made in the congressional oversight system, and our committees regularly engage in working with the administration and with the Senate to develop changes on which both branches of Congress can agree.

As I mentioned in my opening remarks on the bill itself some several hours ago, I expect that this year that process will produce some badly needed improvements both in quantity and quality of the information given to Congress when it is notified of the initiation of a covert action. Those improvements include requirements that findings be in writing, that they be contemporaneous with the decision to initiate a covert action, and that they clearly specify if the involvement of non-U.S. Government third parties and agencies other than the intelligence agencies is contemplated. These changes will not satisfy everyone, especially those who have reservations about the wisdom of covert action programs under any circumstances, but they are precisely the procedural changes recommended by the Iran-Contra committees. That is what they recommended. They did not recommend the provisions in the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

The provisions they recommended are in the Senate bill and will, I hope and trust, be approved by the conference committee between our two Houses in the near future, and I believe that they represent the most that can be achieved, certainly this year.

The question for me on an effort like the amendment before us is whether it will facilitate efforts by the Intelligence Committee to enhance oversight of the intelligence community. I have concluded that for a number of reasons the amendment will likely have the opposite effect.

First, of course, the amendment seeks to provide Congress with a prior approval authority for covert actions, an authority that would be exercised by the intelligence committees of each House. Either committee could prevent a covert action from being implemented by refusing to approve it.

In light of the Supreme Court's decision in the Chadha case, the constitutionality of the creation of what effectively would be a one-House veto procedure is highly doubtful.

Second, the confrontation with the administration that the amendment's quantification of timely notice is certain to provoke will not be resolved, in my judgment, in favor of the Congress. I can tell the Members from firsthand experience that the Bush administration, like the Reagan and the Carter administrations before it, is unwilling to have the concept of timely notice expressed in terms of hours or days. That is unfortunate, in this gentleman's options, but it is true. That unwillingness is based on a strongly held view of the interpretation of the constitutional powers of the President.

We are not going to change the President's interpretation of his powers by an action we take on this floor.

I therefore believe strongly that this amendment, even if we approve it here, cannot eventually be enacted into law, and I fear that the consequences of putting forth a position on this issue which does not succeed legislatively will be to jeopardize the progress which we have made, incrementally perhaps, but progress nonetheless in ensuring that Congress plays an ever increasingly effective role in overseeing covert action.

I want to try, if it is at all possible for me to do so to my friends over here especially, to provide some assurance to Members of Congress and to the public about the special nature and quality of our system of intelligence oversight. We have an extraordinary system of legislative oversight and review in this country. The United States is unique among the world's democracies in that we require that the Congress be kept fully and currently informed, Mr. Chairman, about intelligence activities, including, of course, covert actions. Congress has the right to know everything—everything about the way in which intelligence programs are pursued, and we do. We are supplied the details of not only the operational aspects of all these programs, but their budgets as well. That is not true in any other country of the world, in any other democracy of the world.

I had the opportunity on two recent occasions to visit just a few months ago with Members of Parliament from both Canada and Great Britain who serve on their intelligence oversight committees, and I was interested to learn, amazed if I may say so, to find out that they are not permitted to know how much money they themselves are voting for intelligence activities in their own country, nor are they told what those activities are, and they, I may say, in turn were astonished to find out that we do know those things.

One of the English gentlemen, in fact, turned to me and said:

> You mean do they ever tell you any of their secrets? They don't tell us any. Every time we raise a question in Parliament, the Minister intercedes and says, I am sure the Right Honorable gentleman does not want to ask that question. I will be happy to talk to him about it later.

My response is that there are no secrets, no secrets at all from the Intelligence Committees of this Congress, of the Senate or the House. We are told all these things.

Let me say also that our system of oversight, whether the subject is covert action or other intelligence activities and, of course, the latter are by far the majority of the activities which we have oversight over. There are not many covert activites. Most are quite small. Most are relatively benign. I do not think Members would be offended by them if they knew about them. It is intended to be a consultative one.

The administration, often in the person of the Director of Central Intelligence, comes to our committee on a regular basis every few weeks and more often if necessary, often, more often to let us know of plans to initiate programs and also to keep us apprised of the status of existing programs.

In turn, we let the administration know what we think about those programs, both old ones and the new ones.

I can recall instances in which expressions of concern by our committees on the House side or on the Senate counterpart led to a decision by the President not to initiate particular programs, including, Mr. Chairman, covert actions.

Obviously, there is a relationship between an administration's recognition of the fact that the power of the purse resides in the Congress and its willingness to pay more than lip service to the process of consultation.

There is also a connection between the willingness of an administration to be cooperative with the intelligence oversight committees and the degree of trust which exists between the parties.

□ 2100

We are constantly working to improve both cooperation and trust, and I want the Members to know, Members should know and members of the public should know that the current administration shares our goals with respect to those particular matters and we are likely, I believe, it is true in fact we have a higher level, a greater amount of mutual trust now than there has been at any time in 13 or more years that these committees have been in existence and have had relationships with one Chief Executive or another.

While I applaud the intent of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], I do not believe her amendment is either necessary, nor will it achieve her goal. It may well make the intelligence oversight system less effective than it is now.

I cannot support her effort. I urge Members to vote to defeat the gentlewoman's amendment.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, I must say to my dear friend that I think he is probably the best chairman I have ever seen and I trust him, and think the important thing is that we are a government of laws, not people, and I think that the people in 1986 thought they knew everything about what was going on. They were lied to. That is why I think it is more important to know exactly what is happening, but also to play an affirmative role in that.

That is the purpose of the Boxer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to my dear friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. I thank the distinguished gentlewoman from California for yielding time to me, and I want to commend her for undertaking to raise this issue in the manner in which she has.

I must say that I am somewhat distressed on hearing the gentleman from Illinois. It seems to me that he really demonstrates a lack of confidence in our democracy, in our representative form of government.

Yes, it is possible that this is not the most iron-clad body, although historically what leaks have taken place have come not from the Congress, they have come from the executive branch of the Government, and that has happened consistently.

Nor do I understand his suggestion that in some fashion people do not have to tell us the truth—unless they are given immunity in advance. The gentleman knows that it is impossible for anyone to claim that he or she gets immunity from lying to Congress. There is no such immunity granted.

We expect witnesses who take the oath before us, who appear before us, to tell the truth. That is their obligation under the law.

Mr. Chairman, the Iran-Contra scandal taught us many important lessons. We learned, for example, about the hazards of excessive secrecy, and about the dangers of government-sanctioned lies. Above all, we learned—or we should have learned—that congressional oversight of covert actions is the best way to avoid a repeat performance.

The Reagan administration plotted and carried out the Iran-Contra caper in secret. Through calculated distortions, misleading half truths, and deliberate lies, the President's men led our Nation down a path that sorely damaged our reputation, our credibility and indeed violated our constitutional framework.

The only sure way to avoid a repetition of the Iran-Contra affair would be to eliminate covert actions altogether. But if we can not do that, we must, at least, ensure that such actions are strictly limited and scrupulously monitored by Congress.

That is why we need the Boxer amendment.

The amendment states that covert operations can be undertaken only in response to extraordinary threats to our national security. Second, it requires the administration to notify Congress and seek prior approval of covert activities. And third, it prohibits third-party foreign countries and private contractors from participating in American covert operations.

While the Boxer amendment sets a strict set of oversight regulations, it also allows the administration flexibility to respond to emergency situations quickly. It permits the notification procedures to be waived for hostage rescue missions, and it allows a 48-hour delay in the requirements in cases of dire emergencies.

Mr. Speaker this amendment will help to ensure that the crucial lessons of the Iran-Contra affairs are not forgotten. I urge my colleagues to support the Boxer amendment.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York. [Mr. McHUGH], the chairman of our subcommittee on legislation.

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment with some reluctance, because I know that the author of the amendment, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] and her supporters have as their purpose strengthening congressional oversight.

I certainly applaud that intent and I share that goal. But I think there really are a number of very practical problems with the amendment as presented.

First of all, in section 503(c)(1) and section 503(e) of the amendment it is required that a covert action to be lawful must be designed to meet an extraordinary threat to the security of the United States or must be designed to protect U.S. citizens from imminent bodily harm or from being seized or held as hostages

These are important purposes, and a covert action should be legitimate for these purposes. However, I think the definition is much too restrictive.

I think many of us can envision covert actions that would serve U.S. interests, but could be deemed unlawful if this amendment were to become law.

Let me cite a hypothetical situation to make point. Let us suppose, hypothetically, that there is a foreign country in which a totalitarian regime completely suppresses democratic expression. Let us suppose, further, that this country is located in an area of vital interest to the United States. Let us suppose, finally, that there is a small dissident group within that country that has come together to promote political change, democratic reforms, and more free expression.

The President of the United States might well determine, with the concurrence of the intelligence committee, that it would be in the interest of the United States and the people of that country to provide some aid and assistance to this dissident group. It might be financial assistance, technical assistance, training, office equipment, or other types of aid designed to enable these dissidents to promote their reforms within that country.

Under the definition proposed by this amendment, that type of assistance could not be provided covertly. If it were provided overtly, it might represent a real threat to the very lives of the dissidents we were attempting to help.

One need not go back in history very far to appreciate that in Eastern Europe, an area of vital interest to the United States, these very circumstances existed. And while this is just a hypothetical case, I think we can appreciate that in other parts of the world a similar situation could pertain.

So this is an example, for me at least, of where limiting covert actions to the description in the amendment would be unwise.

A second problem I find with the definition is that under no circumstances could a covert action employ a third party.

Let us take the example I used just a moment ago. Let us suppose that the President determined that it would be better for the United States and the dissident group in question not to use American agents to go into this country, but rather to use expatriates from that country who had left the country earlier, who were citizens of that country and willing to take the risk of going back in to help that small dissident group get organized.

Under this amendment, as I read it, we could not use those expatriates—they could be third parties in this covert operation. I think that would be unfortunate.

Finally, I think the gentlewoman probably inadvertently broadens under her amendment the agencies that could be used for covert actions. In section 503(c)(3) she suggests, at least implicitly, that Federal law enforcement agencies could be used in covert operations. That is not permitted now in covert operations abroad, and I cannot believe it is the intent of this House or perhaps even the gentlewoman, the author of the amendment, to permit that. However, it would be permitted if this amendment became law.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McHUGH. I yield to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have to say to the gentleman that in his hypotheticals I come to a completely different conclusion. If the fact the President found in this hypothetical country that there was a threat to our national security, let us say we did business there, our citizens were there, he could absolutely, absolutely, find that a covert activity would be appropriate.

Mr. McHUGH. I respond to the gentlewoman that under her language the President would have to determine that the covert action was designed to meet "an extraordinary threat" to the U.S. national security.

In the hypothetical which I have described, we are talking about a situation where a small group of dissidents has the opportunity to open up the political system. We are responding in that hypothetical with a covert operation to assist them in that purpose. It is not a covert operation designed to meet an extraordinary threat to the security of the United States.

And for that reason I think it would not be permissible under the gentlewoman's amendment.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman if the President found that the government they would like to see overthrown, quote unquote, or could be a threat, he could find that. Also, he would use expatriates, if they were employed by this Government.

□ 2110

The thing is we do not want to have three agents running around, as far as the agency is concerned; in the said amendment any agency would be used in ours. We limit it to law enforcement agencies and intelligence gathering agencies.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], the senior member of the California delegation and a very important member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I approach the subject this evening from the vantage point of being chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary that for many years has had jurisdiction oversight and budget over the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and I am fairly well acquainted with the problems of oversight and administration of an investigative organization. At this particularly time in history we are very fortunate. We have really not only a splendid head of the CIA and of the FBI, but we also have extraordinarily talented members, especially the chairman and the ranking Republican of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. That it is why everything is working rather well right now, and that is in essence a testimony to the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], my friend. Of course it works well when we have the kind of committee that we have now.

However, Mr. Chairman, we are not going to always have that kind of a committee, and historically we have not had that kind of a committee. I have been here a long time. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] has been here a long time.

Our founders did not contemplate government by men. They contemplated and put into the Constitution governing by laws. And it is a very untrustworthy system and a dangerous system which says, "You can be pals and insist that they tell you what they're doing," and so forth, and that is not the way it is going to work. I assure my colleagues that we never know who we are going to get as head of the FBI or the CIA.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on for hours. All of my colleagues could.

In the 1970's we had so many scandals that we had to have select committees, select committees at great expense with special counsels, the Church committee in the Senate and the Pike committee in the House. The report was so scandalous when it came out and the House was so shocked that we voted not even to release it because we were so ashamed of what was going on with the intelligence agencies. That was what happened in the 1970's.

Just the other day I read a report of the Arms Control and Foreign Policy Caucus that was issued back in 1984, and it described seven covert actions for a number of years, since I just cannot tell my colleagues in how many countries' covert actions had been going on with the CIA. Do my colleagues want to know something? Practically all of them had been very, very unsuccessful. They would have been much better had they not happened at all.

Just think of Iran. We ended up with the Ayatollah Khomeini because of our covert actions in putting the Shah into power.

I want to recommend very strongly the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] be accepted. It is a sound amendment putting the intelligence committee where our founders wanted it to be. We are talking about war-making powers here. Remember that. We are not talking about surveillance. We have no problem with surveillance. We are talking about action powers, war-making powers. They belong in the Congress. They do not belong in the President's office.

Mr. Chairman, I list below some of the covert actions of past years, together with the consequences of them. As you can see, they in most cases were failures.

Date	Country	Brief Description of Covert Operations	Update
1953	Iran	CIA covert operations and financing, masterminded by Kermit Roosevelt, succeeded in overthrowing popular but left-leaning Premier Mohammed Mossadegh, and in installing to power Shah Reza Pahlavi.	The Shah ruled for 26 years, when popular discontent, religious fanatacism and political upheaval against U.S. domination forced the Shah's exile, and replaced him with Ayatollah Khomeini.
1953	Philippines	Under CIA auspices, Col. Edward Lansdale went to the Philippines in the early 1950's to aid in the defeat of local communist guerillas (the Huks), and to help engineer the 1953 election of President Magasaysay.	Magsaysay, a progressive, was killed in a plane crash in 1957. After several moderate leaders intervened, Ferdinand Marcos was elected in 1965. He declared martial law in 1972.
1954	Guatemala	The CIA is generally perceived and credited with masterminding and financing the coup which ended 10 years of progressive governments which had sought to promote labor unions, social measures, and land reform (a majority of the land was owned by the United Fruit Company.) The CIA's rebels attacked from Honduras, and with the help of the Army, forced the President from office and set up a military government.	Political confusion and instability has continued since the 1950's, with both army and civilian governments in power. Since 1970, the government has been run by military leaders, amidst charges of fraudulent elections. The most recent coup d'etat (this month) raises further questions about the future of US-Guatemalan relations.
1950's	China	The CIA supported, on its own and in cooperation with Chiang-Kai-shek, guerilla operations against China. Operations were reduced or eliminated after the shooting down in 1954 of two agents Richard Fecteau and John Downey.	Para-military operations against China were short-lived and without positive result. President Nixon visited China in 1972, paving the way to full diplomatic relations.
1955	Vietnam	Agents had been present in Vietnam through the early 1950's, although not in paramilitary operations. Col. Lansdale (see above) is generally credited with eliminating the political rivals of Ngo Dinh Diem, and designing the election ballots which elected him in 1955.	Diem's victory and tenure lasted approximately eight years (see Covert Operations, 1963.)
1958	Indonesia	CIA agents and operatives sought to overthrow the government of President Sukarno; operations included B-26 bombing missions in support of insurgents on Sumatra.	Sukarno solidified power by defeating the insurgents, and balancing the Army and the Communist Party. He was replaced in 1965 by President Suharto.
1959–64	Tibet	After the Chinese take-over of Tibet and the escape of the Dalai Lama to exile in India, the CIA secretly trained and equipped his troops, also in exile in India, for operations against the Chinese in Tibet.	Several raids into Tibet did yield the capture of important Chinese documents, but the Chinese hold over Tibet remains today. Serious destabilization efforts were abandoned by 1964.

1960	Guatemala	While training Cuban exiles for the CIA's planned overthrow of Castro, the CIA used Guatemalan territory as its "jumping off point" for the Cuban operation. When a rebellion grew against the Guatemalan government, the CIA sent in B-26's to crush the insurgency and to ensure the secrecy of its operations.	As noted above, Guatemala remains one of the most repressive nations in Central America, and continues to experience violence.
1960	Congo	Two CIA officials were dispatched to assassinate Congolese leader Lumumba, who had threatened to bring the Congo under Soviet influence after independence. This particular attempt was never made, but Lumumba was killed in 1961 by the orders of CIA-supported Congolese officials.	Civil disorder, along with a secession movement by the Katanga province, followed in 1961. After UN troops restored order and a coalition government was formed and then deposed, President Mobutu took over.
Early 1960's.	Laos	One of the largest secret operations in CIA history was the "secret war" in Laos. Some 50 CIA agents and hired contractors recruited over 35,000 Meo and other Lao tribesmen into a secret "L'Armee Clandestine," and financed some 17,000 Thai mercenaries, to oppose communism in Indochina.	The war in Laos eventually lost its "secret" nature, but the country remained a battleground between the U.S. and Vietnam for years. Vietnamese-supported forces eventually prevailed. Even now, turmoil continues amidst charges of the use of chemical weapons in Laos.
1961	Dominican Republic	Dictator Trujillo was shot to death by Dominicans who had received weapons and support from the CIA, according to the Senate Select Committee report.	Efforts at economic development in the early '60's came to a halt in 1965, when President Johnson sent in U.S. troops. The peaceful transfer of power in 1978 to President Guzman has resulted in some progress in promoting civil and political rights, but poverty and unemployment remain.
1961	Cuba	The Bay of Pigs operation against Castro, which had entailed massive planning, training and financing, is generally regarded as the CIA's most notable failure.	The Bay of Pigs operation resulted in the departure of Allen Dulles as CIA director, and continued deterioration of US-Cuban relations.
1961-67	Congo	After Lumumba's death, the CIA sought to influence politics with payments to candidates. By 1964, CIA B-26 aircraft were in bombing missions, with Cuban pilots on contract to the CIA.	President Mobutu's takeover, with CIA help, has lasted through the present, although charges of corruption and excessive authoritarianism recurrently threaten stability.
1963	Vietnam	President Diem, elected in 1955 with CIA help, was overthrown and assassinated by a military coup about which the CIA knew, but in which they did not participate, according to the Senate Select Committee.	Diem was replaced by President Thieu and Gen. Ky, who remained in power until the communist takeover in 1975.
1960-65	Cuba	The CIA concocted "at least eight plots" according to the Senate Committee, to assassinate Castro, involving exotic devices such as poison pens, pills and cigars, and powder designed to make Castro's beard fall out—thus "ruining his charismatic image." Sabotage raids against oil refineries and other industrial targets also existed in the early '60's.	all the assassination and covert plots failed, and Castro's image and standing in the Third World was enhanced, in the eyes of many.
Mid-1960's	Peru	According to at least one former CIA agent, the CIA, at the request of the Peruvian government facing guerilla insurrection, financed construction of a major military installation in the jungle, furnished helicopters, arms and other equipment, and provided training of forces by Green Berets on loan from the Army.	The Peruvian guerillas were defeated by a government generally regarded as an oligarchy. In 1968, a coup installed a "revolutionary government of the armed forces," which has since become more moderate.
1965	Vietnam	In a disinformation (but not paramilitary) campaign, according to a recent Washington Post story, the CIA allegedly planned to "con" public opinion by taking communist-made weapons from CIA warehouses, planting them in a Vietnamese battle, and calling in reporters to see the captured weapons as proof of communist weapons in South Vietnam.	This particular plan was not implemented in 1965, but the ex-agent making the claim in the Post suggested that the same concept might be being used in El Salvador today.
1960's	Vietnam	CIA involvement in Vietnam continued with development and implementation of the Phoenix Program, which allegedly "neutralized" (killed) some 20,000 Viet-Cong.	The Phoenix Program apparently ended by 1970, but the war continued until the communist takeover in 1975.
1963-73	Chile	For ten years, "extensive and continuous" CIA covert action aimed at influencing Chile's elections and overthrowing the government of popularly elected Salvador Allende. Although there were no paramilitary operations, some $3 million went into the 1964 election, resulting in the presidency of Eduardo Frei, and some $8 million opposed Allende after his 1970 election.	Allende's overthrow and death resulted in the succession of Gen. Pinochet in a military junta government.
1967	Bolivia	The CIA provided aid to Bolivian President Barrientos to deal with rebel guerilla forces soon discovered being led by Che Guevara.	Che Guevara was killed by Bolivian forces. Barrientos' death in a plane crash was followed by two leftist military governments, and then by other military leaders.

1972–75	Iraq	At the request of the Shah of Iran, the CIA provided arms to Kurdish rebels fighting for autonomy in Iraq.	Iranian and US aid apparently ended in 1975; but the Kurds are generally perceived today as a potentially de-stabilizing element in Iran, Iraq and Turkey.
1974–76	Angola	Covert activities during transition to independence sought to help two factions. One of these factions, headed by Jonas Savimbi, is still seeking power..	Overt Cuban involvement helped shift the balance from South African and CIA-backed forces, and the Clark Amendment ended covert U.S. activities. Angola's government is now officially Marxist, but allows U.S. businesses to operate in its country.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] for yielding.

I just want to say to my dear friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], that my recollection of the reason we got the Ayatollah Khomeini was because of some of his liberals hounding the Shah out of the country and his dreaded Savak. We were treated to speeches ad nauseam about how horrible the Shah was, and we did not give much thought about who would succeed the Shah, as so often happens. So, it was not the CIA that put the ayatollah in. I think it was the liberals in the Congress.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I would just point out to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], my friend, that it was the people of Iran, not the Congress, that got rid of the Shah.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an unnecessary and harmful amendment. Two years ago the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence held hearings on H.R. 4822, the 48-hour bill, and heard a great deal of testimony on both sides of this issue at that time. One of the things which struck me then is the practical difficulties that an amendment like this will cause for our covert activities, which comprise a small, but very important part of our intelligence activities.

There are some very serious constitutional concerns that a number of expert witnesses brought to our attention during the committee hearings, but for the moment, I would like to focus in on the practical problems that would arise should this bill become law.

Former intelligence officials in both Democrat and Republican administrations told the committee that the Iran-Contra affair was an aberration—that the failure was in the people running the program rather than in the process itself.

They pointed out that the then 48-hour and now 24-hour notice periods could potentially increase the danger to the lives of our foreign operatives and would have a chilling effect on the cooperation that we have come to expect from our allies.

Covert operations are an important part of our effort to protect the national security interests of the United States. The majority of the witnesses that we heard who support this legislation do not believe we should be engaging in covert activities at all. If this amendment becomes law they may get their wish.

Our allies would become increasingly reluctant to cooperate with us if they felt that the information would be broadcast to too many people, and future administrations would think twice about engaging in any covert activity unless they felt that there was a consensus among all of the Members that must be notified. That's a bad way to do business.

But the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] even goes further to prevent the use of covert third parties in this amendment.

Although I am very concerned about the practical difficulties that will cause, an equally taxing problem is the constitutional impact of this legislation.

Scholars and, for that matter, officials of both branches argue about the constitutional prerogatives of the executive and the legislative branches. But this amendment's rigid procedural constraints and micromanagerial rules in the guise of oversight create conditions of permanent constitutional conflict that will be harmful to the spirit of cooperation that must exist between future administrations and Congress.

It is a serious mistake to build into the statutory structure of executive-legislative branch relations a permanent invitation to disagreement and controversy.

We need to think about whether in our zeal to extend the boundaries of congressional oversight we are actually harming our national security interests.

During the Carter administration, the drafters of the current law recognized that there were legitimate interests of both the executive and legislative branches that needed to be protected. President Carter experienced that at least once. They realized that cooperation between the branches was necessary in order to have both effective oversight and a useful intelligence program.

So they did not try to overregulate the intelligence functions of the administration. In effect, they opted for pragmatic ambiguity instead of statutory micromanagement.

There is no doubt that the Reagan administration was less than cooperative in this regard during the Iran-Contra affair, but it paid dearly, and the new administration made a major effort to install corrective procedures. We should allow enough time to see whether those new rules work, especially in this age of danger posed by the likes of Saddam Hussein.

At this point there is no reason to bind this administration with an unworkable and unnecessary statutory formula that guarantees conflict between the branches, and I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS].

Mr. DELLUMS. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Boxer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was elected to Congress in 1970. In 1974, I wrote the Omnibus Intelligence Control Act, which was introduced and reintroduced for a number of years. The main purpose of this legislation was to reign in control of the U.S. intelligence apparatus. Central to that theme was and is the elimination of covert activity as an instrument of foreign policy.

Further, during my service on the House Select Committee on Intelligence that the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS] alluded to, that investigated intelligence abuses 15 years ago, I received chilling documentation on the dangers and disastrous effects of American covert activities.

The American people expect and I believe deserve the implementation of a foreign policy which is based on humane principles and democratic ideals. Such policies can only be formulated in the full light of public debate, and implemented under the scrutiny of open congressional oversight.

Mr. Chairman, since 1947 our military and foreign policy has existed under the heavy influence of our national security apparatus.

I oppose the destabilization of foreign governments through the actions of covert operatives. I favor international movements for democratization, which are fueled by the power of the idea, for which we in this body stand as an example.

I oppose so-called guerrilla movements operating under the rubric of "freedom fighters," whose aim is to overthrow foreign nations on behalf of the American people, using American tax dollars, without the knowledge of the American people.

Mr. Chairman, it is with great pride that I rise in support of the Boxer amendment. The amendment to the intelligence authorization bill offered by the distinguished gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] is a reasonable and measured response to recent efforts to further codify the national security approach to foreign policy. I applaud her efforts and urge Members to support her amendment.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, as a general rule, I do not like covert actions. They go beyond traditional information gathering to affirmative types of conduct, influencing types of conduct. But sometimes they are necessary. This amendment unnecessarily complicates, restricts, and confuses a process that is working well now and will prevent some covert actions that might be necessary for America's national security.

Not only that, the amendment may put U.S. citizens in jeopardy. Let me give Members an example.

The Boxer amendment says that one cannot use any third parties, foreign country or agent thereof, private contractor, or other entity which is not an element of the U.S. Government in these covert actions.

One of the keys in any covert action is for a person to be unattributed. If the Boxer amendment were adopted, it might mean you would have to use U.S. citizens in circumstances where their lives would be directly in jeopardy, where in urgent circumstances an unattributed foreign national may be utilized. If you would use foreign nationals in some of those certain circumstances, it could be done safely and in the better interest of the United States of America.

With respect to the issue of congressional oversight, not only is the oversight process therein working well, but Congress has the ultimate power, the power of the purse, the power of funding these actions. We have, and we will, and we should stop funding if they are not working well.

I would just say that the challenges to this country in the future are unknown. We are moving into an arena where terrorism, economic threats and other uncertain challenges to this country are very great indeed. Our congressional job in intelligence is to do proper oversight, but not to cut off in advance a lot of activities which may be necessary in a most uncertain world.

Because of that, I would urge Members to vote down the Boxer amendment. I know it is well-intentioned, but it is not in the best interest of this country.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 seconds, only to say to the gentleman, you can use foreign nationals, as long as you hire them so that the Federal Government, when we do something, takes responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my dear friend, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for recognizing me and commend her for introducing this important amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Boxer amendment to H.R. 5422, the intelligence authorization bill, which would ensure that U.S. intelligence activities are carried out within the boundaries of the constitution and under the purview of congressinal intelligence committees. I commend my colleague, Congresswoman BOXER, for offering this important amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Iran-Contra scandal demonstrated that Congress must take a strong role in the oversight of United States intelligence activities and United States-sponsored covert action. To prevent abuses within the intelligence community, the House and Senate Select Committees on Intelligence must serve as an informed watchdog over United States covert actions. In addition, the intelligence community must know clearly what they can and cannot do. The Boxer amendment would set up a system of checks and balances to monitor and, if appropriate, stop covert action and establish explicit prohibitions on activities which may result in another ill-conceived covert operation.

The Boxer amendment would require prior approval by the House and Senate intelligence committees for covert actions except in extraordinary emergencies when Congress would have to be consulted within 24 hours. It would also limit the definition of covert action to extraordinary threats to national security and prohibit the use of third parties in covert action. The Boxer amendment would not inhibit the ability of the President to carry out foreign policy or compromise the need to maintain classified information.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an aye vote on the Boxer amendment.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER], another valued member of our commitee.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Boxer amendment. I think it is interesting and somewhat telling that senior members, former members, and former chairmen and ranking members of the Committee on Intelligence, are not here supporting this amendment. Neither are junior members of the House Select Committee on Intelligence, like this member.

Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that the oversight process is working very well today. There are many constitutional problems with the Boxer amendment before us today. However, I will only focus on a few of the procedural difficulties created by it.

Mr. Chairman, if you take a look at section 503(c)(1), for example, the covert operations would be restricted to those that create "an extraordinary threat to the national security."

Covert operations should not be and are not engaged in lightly, but this new very high threshold, I suggest, would extraordinarily limit and inappropriately limit the United States in its covert activities and in its ability to protect our national interest.

Section 503(c)(2), actually would prohibit the United States from engaging in covert operations with an ally, a country like Great Britain or Canada. That is an extraordinary limitation on our ability to conduct covert activities. That is an extraordinary limitation that should not be acceptable.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCHUGH], has already pointed out what was, undoubtedly, an inadvertent enlargement of those Federal agencies that now can be involved in covert operations. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, is prohibited from that kind of activity abroad, but would seem to be so authorized under the Boxer amendment.

I would like to go to section 503(c)(4). It reads:

> The covert action does not propose, intend or otherwise result in the influencing of the United States political processes, public opinion, policies, or media.

Certainly that is probably not the intent, but a covert activity abroad could well have an impact upon the media here. To set this kind of limitation simply is unworkable in its results. The possibility of being charged with illegal activity that inadvertently resulted would place a chilling effect in otherwise legitimate and necessary covert operations conducted abroad.

Mr. Chairman, finally I would like to make these points in response to what has been said here earlier. Even as a junior Member of the House Select Committee on Intelligence I have felt I have had some real impact along with fellow Members in changing or stopping suggested covert operations. It is not true that Members simply sit in the select committee and listen and can have no impact upon it.

Mr. Chairman, I am also in fundamental disagreement with the statement here a few minutes ago that covert operations in general do not work. There is a record of extraordinary success. You only hear about those that are problematic. We ought not advance the Boxer amendment. For these and many other reasons I urge Members to defeat it.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 50 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if our Founding Fathers returned to modern America which aspect of constitutional interpretation they would find more surprising?

I suspect it might be article 1, section 8, clause 11. In that clause the Committee of Detail in our first constitutional convention vested in the Congress the power to declare war. As we learned from the Federalist Papers, the framers did not want the wealth and blood of our Nation committed by the decision of a single individual, so they concluded that the potentially momentous consequences of initiating war should only be called up by the concurrence of the President and both Houses of Congress.

Now, through the Second World War the Congress either declared war or ratified a President's declaration of war. But the so-called police action in the Korean conflict and the Vietnam war avoided the clear intent of the war powers clause. Americans fought and died in protracted conflicts without any specific congressional declaration.

The negative national reaction to the Vietnam experience led Congress to enact the War Powers Act over President Nixon's veto. It was designed to tighten the constitutional requirement of a congressional declaration of war, and to spell out in more specific terms the circumstances which would require congressional action.

Most would agree the War Powers Act has had limited utility. Efforts to enforce it through the courts have fallen short. In fact, even Congress for political and philosophical reasons has been reluctant to assert the war powers delegation of power in the Constitution. One need only consider the fact that today, 200,000 Americans are in Saudi Arabia with little more than a vague resolution from this House of Representatives. We have fallen short of the constitutional dictates, even when it comes to today's situation in the Persian Gulf.

The amendment before us addresses an important aspect of this debate, and that is the appropriate role of Congress in covert action. Just what is covert action? It is the instrument of America's national security policy. The term itself almost defies simple definition. But it is described as an activity conducted by the U.S. Government to meet an extraordinary threat. It can include paramilitary action under current law, and its commission can be delegated to third parties and other nations. It can be used to strengthen or to destabilize governments and political forces in foreign nations.

With the resources and prestige of the United States, the power and scope of covert action is substantial. It can define or defy our stated national security policy. It can lead us to war.

Let me just say in very quick conclusion that some may argue that congressional approval is too uncertain. In fact, I am a little bit surprised that my colleague from Illinois has such a low opinion of some of his colleagues on the Intelligence Committee when it comes to harboring the secrets that are shared with them. I honestly believe the men and women serving on that committee are respected and that they are bipartisan in their approach to issues of national security.

I sincerely hope that every Member will support the amendment of the gentlewoman from California.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], the only Member from California who is speaking on this side of this matter, and who is a very valued member of the committee.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank my excellent chairman for the time and point out that having been appointed to replace the chair held by our current Secretary of Defense, Richard Cheney, I am the most junior member of the committee.

I would like to point out that our 51st President, our Chief Executive, President Bush, has more experience in intelligence than any of the other 40 gentlemen who have held that Presidential position. And he would certainly veto the intelligence authorization if it contained the gentlewoman's language.

It is clearly unconstitutional under both the Chadha and Bowsher rulings.

But let me point out just one illustrative example. If Saddam Hussein were to be so bold as to have the bravado to travel to Amman, Jordan, and to meet with people, and to arouse the citizenry there, and we found out about it 24 or 48 hours out, and the only asset we had there was a British helicopter to use our people to snatch him and put him on a British helicopter and get him out of there and bring him to an atrocities trial which the President wants, the gentlewoman's amendment would preclude our doing that, and possibly, hopefully, would save tens of thousands of lives if Desert Shield turns into action.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DEFAZIO].

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Chairman, to the prior speaker I would say he has not read the amendment thoroughly. That is not true. That would be an extraordinary circumstance for which an exception could be taken.

There is always a fraction between a constitutional, political system which requires the active consent of the governed, in this case the elected representatives of the governed, the Intelligence Committee and the Members of Congress, an inherently antidemocratic national security system built on secrecy and nonaccountability.

There is a delicate balance to be struck here, and the committee bill would benefit by strengthening the checks and balances. This amendment does not deal with routine intelligence gathering, only covert actions.

This bill requires prior approval by the Intelligence Committee, with an exception for extraordinary circumstances, which have been mentioned by numerous Members here tonight, and in every one of these cases an exception could be allowed.

Only intelligence agencies and the Department of Defense and Federal law enforcement agencies could undertake these activities. I do not think that is a restriction that this body should be concerned with. No third parties. No foreign countries, private contractors like we had in Iran-Contra.

Do we learn from experience? I have a quote here from the report on the Iran-Contra scandal.

> The confusion, deception, and privatization which marked the Iran-Contra affair were the inevitable products of an attempt to avoid accountability. Congress, the Cabinet, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff were denied information and excluded from the decisionmaking process. Democratic procedures were disregarded.
> LEE HAMILTON said:
> In the final analysis, it's a question of balance. We must balance the harm that may result from the disclosure of a secret against the value of consultation and independent advice for the President prior to the initiation of a covert action.

I urge my colleagues to vote in support of the Boxer amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] has 2¾ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] has 1 minute remaining. The gentleman from California, being chairman of the committee, has the right to close debate.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EVANS] and I retain the three-quarters of a minute to make my closing remarks.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California.

The abuses and excesses of our intelligence community in running covert operations are legendary. The Iran-Contra scandal was only the latest in a string of misadventures that stretch all around the world. From attempting to overthrow governments in Central America to selling arms to Iranian religious fanatics. Quite often our country's covert operations have disgraced this Nation. It is time we reformed our Nation's intelligence community and restored our Nation's reputation as a country that respects the rule of law.

The Boxer amendment would go a long way in reaching this goal. The amendment would essentially give Congress the oversight role it deserves over covert operations. It would require that our Intelligence Committees approve any covert operations. The bill would also prohibit foreign countries and private contractors from funding and participating in covert operations. Finally, it would allow covert actions only for extraordinary threats to our national security.

Besides making important reforms, I believe the amendment also sends a vital and timely message to the world that we are finally trying to control a part of our foreign policy that has consistently flouted international law. In light of our determined efforts to force Iraq to follow the norms of international law, this is especially important. I urge my colleagues to vote for the amendment.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three-fourths of a minute, the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to my friend, the gentleman from California, under my amendment we could use a British helicopter to nab Saddam Hussein, and the President can go forward for 48 hours without having to get the approval of the committees in an emergency.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is not rigid. It simply gives more power to this body in behalf of the American people to be a check and a balance on an executive branch that could get out of hand.

Sure, everything is going fine now. I am happy to hear it. I am delighted. I hope it continues. It is going fine until the next scandal.

Let us not have another scandal. Let us support this amendment. I think that would give us, in an institutional form, the way for these Intelligence Committees, not only to be bystanders, not only to be notified, but to give their assent to covert activities in behalf of this Congress and in behalf of the American people.

I thank the Chair for his generosity, and I thank my dear friend, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], for his dignity and his support of my being allowed to bring this amendment forward.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I am submitting for the RECORD an article that was written in 1985 by Daniel Schorr which clearly outlines the fact that Members of Congress do leak information to the press.

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 14, 1985]

CLOAK-AND-DAGGER RELICS

(By Daniel Schorr)

If the investigation ordered by President Reagan were to identify an official of the executive branch as having disclosed information about the anti-Qaddafi operation to The Washington Post, that person could be prosecuted for espionage. This is the result of the precedent set when Samuel Loring Morison, former Navy intelligence analyst, was convicted under the 1917 Espionage Act for having provided three classified satellite photographs of a nuclear-powered Soviet aircraft carrier to Jane's Fighting Ships.

The problem becomes stickier, however, if it turns out to be a congressional source. On one occasion, in 1975, the Justice Department threatened to withhold classified information from the House intelligence committee if the material was not protected from disclosure. But it has never been suggested that a member of Congress could be disciplined other than by Congress itself.

This is relevant because (I don't think that I am baring any great journalistic secrets) the exposure of covert intelligence operations is frequently a form of congressional whistle-blowing. A leak often occurs when a clandestine plan runs into substantial opposition during a briefing for congressional committees.

For example, in 1974 the Nixon-Kissinger plan to undermine Chile's President Salvador Allende leaked to the press (Seymour Hersh of the New York Times) at a time when it was a subject of intense criticism by some members of Congress.

In 1975, the CIA's support of the anticommunist faction in Angola (also a Kissinger project) was disclosed after it became an issue in the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The late Rep. Leo Ryan, a member of that committee, told me in an interview at the time that he could condone such a leak if it was the only way to block an ill-conceived operation.

Ryan was subsequently the author, with Sen. Harold Hughes, of legislation that banned CIA involvement in Angola. (That provision was recently repealed.)

To minimize damaging leaks, the congressional leadership eventually agreed to restrict briefings on covert operations to the Senate and House intelligence committees. That did not, however, solve the problem.

In 1983, Sen. Barry Goldwater, then chairman of the intelligence committee, put on the public record the CIA-organized mining of Nicaraguan harbors with a letter to CIA Director William Casey objecting to the operation. (That letter became a prime exhibit in Nicaragua's complaint to the International Court of Justice.) Sen. Jesse Helms was charged with—but denied—having revealed CIA covert aid to the election campaign of El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Libya's Muammar Qaddafi has been the subject of a previous leak. In August 1981, Newsweek reported that opposition had developed in the House intelligence committee during a briefing on a plan to destabilize the Qaddafi regime. The Reagan administration denied the existence of any such plan. There followed a scare over reported Libyan "hit squads" out to murder President Reagan. Intelligence officials now believe there were no such "hit squads"—that the whole thing was a hoax meant to put Reagan on notice that plotting against a president could be a two-way street.

That has apparently not deterred the president from approving one more plan to undermine Qaddafi. Once again the leak occurred shortly after briefings in the congressional intelligence committee.

By law, the administration must give timely notice to Congress of plans for covert operations. The intelligence committees and their staffs are supposed to respect the secrecy of the information. But, in an era when covert aid to Nicaraguan contras is openly debated, the old-style clandestine operation may be a thing of the past.

It may be time to consign the cloak and dagger to a museum. anyway, the cloak.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Boxer amendment. I am very concerned about how it might affect our POW-MIA's in Southeast Asia.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Boxer amendment. While it may sound good to some, this amendment would cripple our intelligence system and capabilities. At a time when we need effective intelligence the most in dealing with Saddam Hussein and the crisis in the gulf, this amendment would undercut allied cooperation, tie the President's hands and benefit no one except Saddam Hussein and other terrorists around the globe.

Some have claimed that the Iran-Contra affair exemplified the need for new restrictions on American intelligence and covert activities. However, the Boxer amendment is akin to using a hand grenade to kill a mosquito. The House and Senate Intelligence Committees have added some new measures and checks on the system through this intelligence bill before us today. The problems that some have highlighted in today's debate are addressed through this intelligence bill without the Boxer amendment. The Boxer amendment goes much, much further effectively eliminating the President's capabilities as commander-in-chief. It is a disastrous amendment which, I believe, is unconstitutional as it directly contradicts article II, section 2 of our Constitution conferring to the President the power of commander-in-chief.

The Boxer amendment requires prior approval by the two Select Intelligence Committees for any and all covert activities. Interestingly, all intelligence officials of recent administrations, both Republican and Democrat—that means the liberal Carter administration—alike, fully oppose this provision. In other words, any time any emergency happens, the President cannot respond without congressional approval. That means if on Christmas Day when Members of Congress are at home or abroad or wherever, if an emergency situation arose—Iraq invades Kuwait, Qaddaffi orders the bombing of a club filled with American GI's, Shiite terrorists suicide bomb the Marine headquarters in Beirut, a TWA jet filled with American tourists is hijacked and taken to Lebanon—the President could not take covert action, like mounting a rescue operation until, in essence, Congress said OK. By then, it could be too late perhaps costing many innocent American lives.

The Boxer amendment does allow for a tiny bit of leeway in a few emergency situations, including some ill-defined hostage rescues. However, even this activity—say a rescue—must be terminated, even if it is underway, if the Intelligence Committees—not just one but both—have not given their written approval. That's ridiculous.

As chairman of the House POW-MIA task force, I am concerned about how the Boxer amendment could complicate the already complex POW-MIA situation. While we currently have no concrete, verifiable information that American servicemen are being held against their will in Southeast Asia, based on the information we do have, our Government has refused to rule out this sad possibility. This issue is a highest national priority of the United States and the President has publicly stated he is ready to take whatever action is necessary based on any intelligence findings. If we find POW's the President should be able to take whatever action is necessary right away to bring them home, not wait for Congress to gather, agree and approve it. By then it could be too late. What a tragedy. Yet, the Boxer amendment could require this or at least impose similar difficulties or at least deter us from taking appropriate action.

The Boxer amendment also prohibits foreign countries from participating in covert actions. This could be very dangerous. During the seizure of our Embassy in Iran in 1979, some Americans managed to escape to the Canadian Embassy which was not occupied. Through covert actions with the Canadians, we were able to get these Americans home. The Boxer amendment could have a chilling effect on such cooperation. Even if the amendment waives this prohibition for actions involving hostages, foreign governments would still refuse to help for fear of this sensitive information being disclosed to Congress at the time. The Canadians, in 1979, made withholding information at that time about their involvement a condition for their participation. Instead of trusting Congress—which is filled with leaks—these foreign allies might just not help us.

Take today's Persian Gulf situation. Let's assume we want to get into Iraq and poke around—gather intelligence and so on. I don't know if we are doing this or not and if I did know I obviously wouldn't say. But hypothetically, it's not too hard to imagine that other countries may somehow be involved, providing a jumpoff base or transit point or some sort of assistance. That would be prohibited by the Boxer amendment. That's foolish and dangerous.

In addition, there are times when we may want to contract out covert activities. Remember, covert activities aren't the sinister, secret wars some erroneously have claimed. They include simple information gathering. We should not rule out any options under any conditions. For example, it appears to me that the Boxer amendment would prohibit contracting with a private satellite owner whose land-mapping satellite happens to be over Iraq—particularly if information from that satellite is used for some other covert action. We hurt only ourselves and jeopardize our forces in the gulf.

Take the case of Lebanon where Americans are easily recognizable and, in some parts, prime targets for assassination and kidnaping. We may want to contract out to someone else to poke around for us for both political and security reasons. Again, I don't know if we're doing this or not, but it is within the realm of possibilities. Not if we enact the Boxer amendment.

Finally, the Boxer amendment requires the President to provide the committees with 24 hours' notice whenever he or she is contemplating—that's right, just thinking—about a covert activity or military action which has not been subject to prior approval. How is Congress supposed to supervise the President's thought processes? This is not detailed in the Boxer amendment. As our colleague JERRY SOLOMON has asked, "Just how seriously must he contemplate something before checking in with the thought police on Capitol Hill?" I certainly hope we have a huge room filled with analysts continuously contemplating options to whatever emergency contingency our Nation may face. As Ben Franklin said "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Must all these contemplations be run through Congress even though they will probably never be used or even reach the second stage of consideration? I do not believe the Intelligence Committees could handle this much information or really needs to.

What if the President is walking Millie late one Saturday night and he contemplates his options and possible actions with regard to the Persian Gulf. According to the Boxer amendment, he must provide both Intelligence Committees within 24 hours—that's by Sunday evening—with his thoughts or else he breaks the law. Why can't this wait until Monday morning? Seriously, these may seem like trivial examples, but they are quite real and they underscore the great flaws with the ill-conceived Boxer amendment.

Clearly, the Boxer amendment would effectively terminate all of our policies in the Persian Gulf and our intelligence operations around the globe—operations designed to protect America's national security interests. Many of our allies who are working with us in the gulf and elsewhere have indicated they would case cooperation if this amendment were enacted into law.

The intelligence system isn't broken. It has worked well for many years now. Some recent incidents, like Iran-Contra, Have highlighted the need to refine some parts of it. The intelligence bill before us does what is needed without ruining our basic intelligence structure and jeopardizing our real national security responsibilities. Frankly, if the Intelligence Committee thought the Boxer amendment was such a good idea, I believe it would have incorporated such provisions into the committee's bill. Note the committee—which is controlled by liberal Democrats—did not.

The Boxer amendment is a good reason for the President to veto the bill. It's a very bad amendment based on flawed judgment and with everything happening in the gulf, the timing of this measure is extremely poor. I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, I want to express my strong support for H.R. 5422, the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991.

At the outset, I want to commend our chairman, Mr. BEILENSON, and the committee's ranking Republican, Mr. HYDE, for the leadership they have provided over the past year. The work of the committee has been greatly enhanced by their efforts.

We live in a vastly different world today, at least from a geopolitical standpoint, than we did a year or two ago. But as significant as recent social and political changes have been, particularly in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, it is clear that the pace of change will not slacken in the days ahead. The world that we knew for more than 40 years is gone, and the national policies that positioned the United States to deal with the dangers of that world will have to be reexamined. The legislation now before us begins the process of refocusing the program of our intelligence services to comport with the new international realities we face. As existing foreign and defense policies are reviewed, I expect that even more scrutiny will be directed toward the intelligence budget.

Changing threats to our national security do not necessarily mean that remaining threats are less demanding. The cold war may have ended, but the dangers posed by international terrorism and the scourge of narcotics, as well as military challenges of different types pose substantial risks to our Nation. Our intelligence agencies have important roles to play in addressing those threats, and the Intelligence Committee has attempted to provide the resources necessary to do that job. It is very clear to the members of the committee, however, that our budget constraints will affect intelligence just as they do every other component of the Federal budget. That argues strongly to me that we need to continually encourage the intelligence agencies to question the way in which they perform their mission, and to carefully assess the tools they need to do their jobs. This bill should serve to stimulate that process.

Mr. Chairman, the work of the Intelligence Committee, since it routinely deals with classified information, is rarely well-publicized. While the time the committee devotes to reviewing those programs which implement foreign policy can produce controversy, our efforts to ensure that the less glamorous programs which provide political, economic, and military information to national decisionmakers is equally important. The committee has done its level best to meet the budgetary needs of our intelligence agencies in a way that encourages them to undertake the process of self-examination that will be imperative if those agencies are to be effective in the post-cold-war era. I look forward to working with other members of the committee on this important effort in the year ahead.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, in closing just very briefly, let me reiterate the arguments I made at the outset that the gentlewoman's proposal is: First, unconstitutional; second, it cannot become law. No President would sign it into law; third, it is unnecessary. The committee is doing well now the job that it is charged to do of oversight of intelligence operations.

It would not have prevented Iran-Contra. The people there did not comply with the law that was in existence at that time. If this law were in existence, they would not have complied with it either.

It would not have stopped Nicaragua. In fact, the committee, in effect, approved of the Nicaraguan involvement, the covert action by voting for funding for that operation year after year until finally under Mr. Boland they stopped doing it. So it would not have affected either of those kinds of situations.

I urge my colleagues to support the committee and oppose this gentlewoman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 70, noes 341, not voting 22, as follows:

Mr. ESPY and Mr. HEFNER changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. SCHEUER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

If not, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose, and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. GEPHARDT] having assumed the chair, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5422) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government, the intelligence community staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 487, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called Solarz amendment, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment: Page 25, after line 18, add the following:

TITLE VI—INCENTIVES FOR PEACE IN ANGOLA

SEC. 601. ENCOURAGING REDUCTIONS IN EXTERNAL ASSISTANCE TO PARTIES TO THE ANGOLAN CONFLICT.

(a) PROHIBITION ON ASSISTANCE.—

(1) PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATION.—If the Government of Angola expresses its willingness to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement to the conflict in Angola and proposes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate, and is no longer receiving aid from the Soviet Union, the President shall promptly so certify to the appropriate committees.

(2) ASSISTANCE PROHIBITED PURSUANT TO CERTIFICATION OR JOINT RESOLUTION.—Except as provided in subsections (b), (c), and (d), if the President makes the certification described in paragraph (1) or if the Congress enacts a joint resolution declaring that the Congress has made the determination with respect to the Government of Angola that is described in that paragraph, then—

(A) intelligence community funds may not be obligated or expended during fiscal year 1991 for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola; and

(B) the United States shall suspend, or cause the suspension of, the delivery to UNITA of any weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment acquired with any intelligence community funds that may have been previously expended, to the extent that the United States retains the ability to suspend such deliveries.

(b) REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION IF THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA IS NO LONGER PURSUING A POLITICAL SOLUTION.—Except as provided in subsection (e), in the event the President has made the certification described in subsection (a)(1) or the Congress has enacted the joint resolution described in subsection (a)(2), subsection (a)(2) shall cease to apply if the President certifies to the appropriate committees that the Government of Angola is no longer willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement and is no longer proposing a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate. A certification may be made under this subsection only during the 3-month period beginning on the date on which the President made his certification under subsection (a)(1) or the Congress enacted a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2), as the case may be.

(c) CONDITIONS FOR REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION AFTER 3 MONTHS.—Should subsection (a)(2) become applicable pursuant to a Presidential certification under subsection (a)(1) or enactment of a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2) or (e), subsection (a)(2) shall cease to apply, subject to subsection (e), if the President certifies to the appropriate committees (after the end of the 3-month period specified in the last sentence of this subsection) that he has made the determinations required by both paragraphs (1) and (2), as follows:

(1) DETERMINATIONS WITH REGARD TO THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA.—A determination either—

(A) that the Government of Angola refuses to participate in good faith in negotiations for a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate;

(B) that—

(i) during the review period, the Soviet Union or other sources outside Angola sold or otherwise made available to the Government of Angola additional, militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment, or

(ii) prior to the end of the review period, the Government of Angola had not ceased receiving militarily significant amounts of lethal military equipment that had previously been sold or otherwise made available by sources outside Angola; or

(C) that the Government of Angola or the Government of Cuba is not complying with its obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement.

(2) DETERMINATIONS WITH REGARD TO UNITA.—A determination both—

(A) that UNITA has expressed its willingness to participate in good faith in negotiations for a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections; and

(B) that—

(i) sources outside Angola did not sell or otherwise make available to UNITA during the review period additional, militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment; and

(ii) prior to the end of the review period, UNITA had ceased receiving militarily significant amounts of lethal military equipment that had previously been sold or otherwise made available by sources outside Angola.

A certification may be made under this subsection only after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date on which the President made his certification under subsection (a)(1) or the Congress enacted a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2), as the case may be; except that if the Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving a certification submitted by the President under this subsection, the President may not make another certification under this subsection until after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date of enactment of that joint resolution.

(d) REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION IF THERE IS A MILITARY OFFENSIVE AGAINST UNITA.—Subsection (a) and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (f) shall cease to apply if the President certifies to the appropriate committees that—

(1) the Government of Angola has launched a military offensive that threatens the survival of UNITA, or

(2) there is clear and credible evidence of a military build-up by the Government of Angola that makes it likely that a military offensive that would threaten the survival of UNITA will occur.

(e) CONGRESSIONAL DISAPPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—If the Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving a certification submitted by the President under subsection (b), (c), or (d), then subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (a)(2) shall apply for the remainder of fiscal year 1991 unless the President subsequently makes a certification under subsection (c) or (d).

(f) LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNTS OF UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE.—

(1) ASSISTANCE DURING FIRST QUARTER OF FISCAL YEAR.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated during the period beginning October 1, 1990, and ending December 31, 1990, for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount which is 25 percent of the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990 or during fiscal year 1991, whichever is less.

(2) ASSISTANCE DURING FIRST HALF OF FISCAL YEAR.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated during the period beginning October 1, 1990, and ending March 31, 1991, for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount which is 50 percent of the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990 or during fiscal year 1991, whichever is less.

(3) ASSISTANCE DURING THE ENTIRE FISCAL YEAR.—The aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated at any time during fiscal year 1991 for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990.

(g) REPORTS ON MILITARY ASSISTANCE DELIVERIES, COMMITMENTS TO MULTIPARTY DEMOCRACY, AND COMPLIANCE WITH CUBAN TROOP WITHDRAWAL AGREEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—On November 1, 1990, January 1, 1991, April 1, 1991, and July 1, 1991, the President shall submit to the appropriate committees a report—

(A) on the extent to which the Government of Angola is continuing to obtain militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment from foreign countries or other third parties;

(B) on the extent to which UNITA is continuing to obtain militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment from foreign countries or other third parties;

(C) on the extent to which the Government of Angola is willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate;

(D) on the extent to which UNITA is willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections; and

(E) on whether the Government of Angola and the Government of Cuba are complying with their obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement.

(2) CERTIFICATION TO BE INCLUDED.—Unless the President has already made the certification described in subsection (a)(1) or the Congress has enacted a joint resolution described in subsection (a)(2), the President shall certify in each report submitted pursuant to paragraph (1) whether the Government of Angola has expressed its willingness to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement to the conflict in Angola and has proposed a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate. If the President certifies pursuant to this paragraph that the Government of Angola has expressed such a willingness and proposed such a timetable, that certification shall be considered to be a certification under subsection (a)(1).

(3) DESCRIPTION OF UNITED STATES EFFORTS.—The report required by paragraph

(1) shall also describe the President's efforts—

(A) to obtain agreement by foreign countries and other third parties to terminate assistance to the Government of Angola and UNITA for the acquisition of militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment; and

(B) to encourage both the Government of Angola and UNITA to agree to a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections.

(4) REPORT WITH CERTIFICATION.—If the President makes a certification under subsection (a)(1), (b), (c), or (d), the President shall include with that certification a report containing the information specified in paragraphs (1) and (3) of this subsection and the justification for the President's certification.

(h) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) the term "appropriate committees" means the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate;

(2) the term "intelligence community funds" means funds available to the Central Intelligence Agency, the Department of Defense, or any other agency or entity of the United States involved in intelligence activities;

(4) the term "review period" means the period beginning on the date the President makes a certification under subsection (a)(1) or a joint resolution is enacted under subsection (a)(2) or (e), as the case may be, and ending on the date on which the President makes a certification under subsection (c); and

(5) the term "UNITA" means the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

Mr. HYDE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

(b) REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION IF THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA IS NO LONGER PURSUING A POLITICAL SOLUTION.—Except as provided in subsection (e), in the event the President has made the certification described in subsection (a)(1) or the Congress has enacted the joint resolution described in subsection (a)(2), subsection (a)(2) shall cease to apply if the President certifies to the appropriate committees that the Government of Angola is no longer willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement and is no longer proposing a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate. A certification may be made under this subsection only during the 3-month period beginning on the date on which the President made his certification under subsection (a)(1) or the Congress enacted a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2), as the case may be.

(c) CONDITIONS FOR REMOVAL OF PROHIBITON AFTER 3 MONTHS.—Should subsection (a)(2) become applicable pursuant a President certification under subsection (a)(1) or enactment of a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2) or (e), subsection (a)(2) shall cease to apply, subject to subsection (e), if the President certifies to the appropriate committees (after the end of the 3-month period specified in the last sentence of this subsection) that he has made the determinations required by both paragraphs (1) and (2), as follows:

(1) DETERMINATIONS WITH REGARD TO THE GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA.—A determination either—

(A) that the Government of Angola refuses to participate in good faith in negotiations for a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate;

(B) that—

(i) during the review period, the Soviet Union or other sources outside Angola sold or otherwise made available to the Government of Angola additional, militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment, or

(ii) prior to the end of the review period, the Government of Angola had not ceased receiving militarily significant amounts of lethal military equipment that had previously been sold or otherwise made available by sources outside Angola; or

(C) that the Government of Angola or the Government of Cuba is not complying with its obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement.

(2) DETERMINATIONS WITH REGARD TO UNITA.—A determination both—

(A) that UNITA has expressed its willingness to participate in good faith in negotiations for a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections; and

(B) that—

(i) sources outside Angola did not sell or otherwise make available to UNITA during the review period additional, militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment; and

(ii) prior to the end of the review period, UNITA had ceased receiving militarily significant amounts of lethal military equipment that had previously been sold or otherwise made available by sources outside Angola.

A certification may be made under this subsection only after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date on which the President made his certification under subsection (a)(1) or the Congress enacted a joint resolution under subsection (a)(2), as the case may be; except that if the Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving a certification submitted by the President under this subsection, the President may not make another certification under this subsection until after the end of the 3-month period beginning on the date of enactment of that joint resolution.

(d) REMOVAL OF PROHIBITION IF THERE IS A MILITARY OFFENSIVE AGAINST UNITA.—Subsection (a) and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (f) shall cease to apply if the President certifies to the appropriate committees that—

(1) the Government of Angola has launched a military offensive that threatens the survival of UNITA, or

(2) there is clear and credible evidence of a military build-up by the Government of Angola that makes it likely that a military offense that would threaten the survival of UNITA will occur.

(e) CONGRESSIONAL DISAPPROVAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CERTIFICATIONS.—If the Congress enacts a joint resolution disapproving a certification submitted by the President under subsection (b), (c), or (d), then subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (a)(2) shall apply for the remainder of fiscal year 1991 unless the President subsequently makes a certification under subsection (c) or (d).

(f) LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNTS OF UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE.—

(1) ASSISTANCE DURING FIRST QUARTER OF FISCAL YEAR.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated during the period beginning October 1, 1990, and ending December 31, 1990, for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount which is 25 percent of the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990 or during fiscal year 1991, whichever is less.

(2) ASSISTANCE DURING FIRST HALF OF FISCAL YEAR.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated during the period beginning October 1, 1990, and ending March 31, 1991, for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount which is 50 percent of the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990 or during fiscal year 1991, whichever is less.

(3) ASSISTANCE DURING ENTIRE FISCAL YEAR.—The aggregate amount of intelligence community funds that is obligated at any time during fiscal year 1991 for the acquisition of weapons, ammunition, or other lethal military equipment for UNITA may not exceed the amount of any intelligence community funds allocated for that purpose during fiscal year 1990.

(g) REPORTS ON MILITARY ASSISTANCE DELIVERIES, COMMITMENTS TO MULTIPARTY DEMOCRACY, AND COMPLIANCE WITH CUBAN TROOP WITHDRAWAL AGREEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—On November 1, 1990, January 1, 1991, April 1, 1991, and July 1, 1991, the President shall submit to the appropriate committees a report—

(A) on the extent to which the Government of Angola is continuing to obtain militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment from foreign countries or other third parties;

(B) on the extent to which UNITA is continuing to obtain militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment from foreign countries or other third parties;

(C) on the extent to which the Government of Angola is willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate;

(D) on the extent to which UNITA is willing to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections; and

(E) on whether the Government of Angola and the Government of Cuba are complying with their obligations under the Cuban Troop Withdrawal Agreement.

(2) CERTIFICATION TO BE INCLUDED.—Unless the President has already made the certification described in subsection (a)(1) or the Congress has enacted a joint resolution described in subsection (a)(2), the President shall certify in each report submitted pursuant to paragraph (1) whether the Government of Angola has expressed its willingness to accept a ceasefire and a political settlement to the conflict in Angola and has proposed a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections in which UNITA would be free to participate. If the President certifies pursuant to this paragraph that the Government of Angola has expressed such a willingness and proposed such a timetable, that certification shall be considered to be a certification under subsection (a)(1).

(3) DESCRIPTION OF UNITED STATES EFFORTS.—The report required by paragraph (1) shall also describe the President's efforts—

(A) to obtain agreement by foreign countries and other third parties to terminate assistance to the Government of Angola and UNITA for the acquisition of militarily significant amounts of weapons, ammunition, and other lethal military equipment; and

(B) to encourage both the Government of Angola and UNITA to agree to a ceasefire and a political settlement that includes a reasonable timetable for free and fair multiparty national elections.

(4) REPORT WITH CERTIFICATION.—If the President makes a certification under subsection (a)(1), (b), (c), or (d), the President shall include with that certification a report containing the information specified in paragraphs (1) and (3) of this subsection and the justification for the President's certification.

APPROVAL OF EXTENSION OF MOST FAVORED NATION TREATMENT TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration in the House of this joint resolution (H.J. Res. 649) approving the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment—most favored nation treatment—to the products of Czechoslovakia, and that the debate be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 649

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress approves the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment with respect to the products of Czechoslovakia transmitted by the President to the Congress on September 6, 1990.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rostenkowski].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 649, a resolution approving the extension of nondiscriminatory most-favored-nation [MFN] treatment to Czechoslovakia.

Nearly 7 months ago, the newly elected President of Czechoslovakia, Vaclav Havel, stood in this Chamber and addressed a joint session of Congress on the dramatic changes that had taken place in his country. Over the course of just a few months, the people of Czechoslovakia had peacefully overthrown the Communist regime that had dominated that country since world war II. They adopted a series of far-reaching changes to the centralized economic system. They now have a freely elected government and are beginning to put the elements of a market-oriented economy in place.

Today, Members of this Chamber have an opportunity to lend a helping hand to President Havel and to all of those in Czechoslovakia working to transform their country. Enactment of H.J. Res. 649 will allow a bilateral trade agreement to enter into effect, granting most-favored-nation trading status for Czechoslovakia. This action will benefit both countries. It will allow Czechoslovakia not only to earn more hard currency through exports, but to use those earnings to import goods necessary to improve its productivity and standard of living. For United States exporters and investors, the trade agreement will provide substantially improved protections in the area of intellectual property rights, dispute settlements, and other areas.

At this time, I want to express my gratitude to Congressman BOB MRAZEK for his leadership in helping the Congress to recognize the importance of taking this important step at this time. Largely because of his contributions, the House has recognized the tangible steps that Czechoslovakia has taken to move toward a market economy.

The Committee on Ways and Means has heard no objections to enactment of House Joint Resolution 649 and the bilateral trade agreement. The General Accounting Office has issued an analysis of the agreement, showing that its implementation would pose no threat to U.S. industry.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to strongly support House Joint Resolution 649 and the normalization of United States trade relations with Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI for his kind and thoughtful remarks in support of granting most-favored-nation status to Czechoslovakia.

This is a deeply personal moment for me. The members of my family, all of whom are of Czechoslovakian ancestry, never quite believed that the beacon of freedom would come to Czechoslovakia in their lifetime.

The noble idea on which our own American society is founded—that all of us have equal value as human beings—that we are judged on the basis of who we are and not who our parents were—was the hallmark of the free Czechoslovakian republic that existed between the two great world wars.

Now, a free Czechoslovakia is again a reality. I am very confident that Czechoslovakia will take its place again in the pantheon of free nations—a nation of people who will treasure their independence with the same great spirit that has always characterized their desire to be free.

I am proud to add my support to this resolution.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI]. The minority believes that it is past time for the adoption of this particular resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, as the Member who represents more Czechoslovakian-Americans than any other, this Member would especially like to offer the strongest possible support for this important and long overdue legislation.

Even without that special constituent consideration, however, clearly, the newly renamed Czech and Slovak Federated Republic merits MFN tariff status.

MFN has long been a matter of deep concern for this Member. Convinced of the importance of rapid action, this Member introduced House Concurrent Resolution 266, a bill to waive Jackson-Vanik limits with regard to Czechoslovakia, on February 20 of this year. House Concurrent Resolution 266 reflected this Member's firm conviction that a timely change in trade policy is essential to improved relations between our two nations. The legislation before this body today is wholly consistent with the objectives of this Member's proposal.

Mr. Speaker, at this time last year Czechoslovakia remained under the tight and seeming unshakable grip of a totalitarian dictatorship. But in the course of few short days last November, the people took to the streets and cast out their oppressors. This velvet revolution—which, by the way, occurred with almost no loss of life, has resulted in a regime that is enthusiastically and passionately democratic. Perhaps because they understand tyranny so well, the Czech and Slovak people have become among the world's most committed converts to democracy and a free market economy.

It should also be noted that the people of Czechoslovakia are among the strongest supporters of the United States. Indeed, some of the most enthusiastic advocates of the American way of life can be found in Prague, in Bratislava, in Pilsen, and in Bruno. This Member has had the good fortune to have travelled to Prague in August on official business, and can testify to the genuinely warm response. Everywhere this Member visited, a deep interest in, and affinity for America was evident.

It is understandable that our two nations should have such deep cultural links. There are, after all, very large numbers of Slovaks, Bohemians, and Moravians in the United States, and these ties of ancestry and heritage have not been erased over the decades of Communist rule. In this Member's own constituency—in communities such as Prague, Dwight, Bee, Bruno, Wilber, Crete, David City, Wahoo, Schuyler, and Verdigre, among others—the traditions of the ancestral homeland live on.

Mr. Speaker, the granting of most-favored-nation tariff status is absolutely fundamental to fostering better relations. By approving MFN, of course, this body will merely be granting normal trading status. Czechoslovakia will not be receiving any special favors—it will simply be permitted to trade without the disadvantages of prohibitive tariffs.

Of course, there are other steps that are necessary to assist American businessmen in Czechoslovakia. Businessmen need, and are beginning to receive, the guarantees and insurance that are offered by OPIC and the Export-Import Bank. The first commercial service officer reached Prague only last month, and a second is already needed. In addition, we must take advantage of the opportunities in Slovakia. To do this the consultate in Bratislava must be opened without delay, a move endorsed by the Bush administration. In short, Mr. Speaker, our new trade relationship requires total change in attitude, and a comprehensive package of policy changes. But MFN is a critical first step—perhaps the critical first step—toward initiating that change.

The action this body takes today will result in important dividends. As Czechoslovakia reduces its dependence on trade with the Soviet Union, it is undoubtedly looking to the West for new trading partners. Also, they do not want to be overwhelmed by German business interests. Instead, the Czechoslovakia Government has made it clear that the United States is the preferred source of imports and services in many different areas. As automakers such as General Motors, telecommunications firms such as U.S. West, and electronics giants such as General Electric open operations in Czechoslovakia, it is clear there is great demand for United States goods and services.

This Member would thank the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade [Mr. GIBBONS] for acting on this measure in a timely manner. I would also like to thank the ranking members, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

Last, this Member would also like to offer this special thanks to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] who has labored for so many years for the advancement of U.S. trade policy. Our distinguished colleague from Minnesota has long demonstrated expertise on our trade policy with respect to the countries of the old Warsaw Pact that is now breaking apart. This Members' first visit to Czechoslovakia was in the company of Mr. FRENZEL, in a group that, by the way, was so very ably and energetically led by our distinguished colleague from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS]. It is, I believe, a special tribute to these two distinguished Member's foresight that we are ready and able to appropriately respond to the very dramatic and positive changes in Czechoslovakia that at long last make MFN recognition highly appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, this Member would urge speedy passage of the legislation.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for House Joint Resolution 649, which extends most-favored-nation status to Czechoslovakia.

This is a resolution originally introduced by the majority leader and myself, as required under the 1973 Trade Act. I was glad to be a sponsor, because this represents another important step in the process of bringing the newly democratic nations of Eastern Europe into the world markets.

The MFN designation is one of the components in the overall trade agreement we have signed with the Czechoslovakian Government. They in turn give us similar MFN status.

Beyond this, the agreement contains certain safeguard arrangements designed to protect our domestic markets and establishes certain rights for our businesses in conducting trade with Czechoslovakia.

In particular, their Government has committed to substantially improve its protection of intellectual property rights.

Overall, the agreement establishes and clarifies the trade framework between the United States and Czechoslovakia. It opens the door for American businesses, such as Caterpillar in my district, to pursue new opportunities for sales, and that means more jobs in this country.

So, it is a good agreement, and since MFN is an essential component of the agreement, it is important that we pass this resolution of approval.

Mrs. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution granting most-favored-nation status to Czechoslovakia. On November 17 last year, a politically free Czechoslovakia emerged from what has been called the velvet revolution. The phrase implies a peaceful change—and it was. But the transformation to a democratic form of government has just begun.

The Czech and Slovak people want freedom. Their excitement energizes any subject—from health care to the chance of owning property for the first time—without having to prove party loyalty. Czechoslovakians speak in terms of post-revolution opportunities, and anxiously want to move toward a market-oriented economy.

This could be more readily achieved if the United States grants MFN status to Czechoslovakia. By doing this, both countries could benefit from the certain development of free trade. I hope that we will encourage Czechoslovakia's passion for democracy and its excitement for economic and political independence by approving this resolution.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 649, which would extend most-favored-nation status to the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic.

The recent events in Eastern Europe are more than just today's news. They are events of compelling historical significance which will resonate for centuries to come. These events are remarkable enough for the profound changes they have generated—almost overnight—in systems marked by decades of entrenched totalitarianism. They are even more remarkable for having come about with relatively little bloodshed. No case illustrates this better than last November's "Velvet" Revolution in Czechoslovakia. There, we witnessed a collective consensus with immense moral force surge forth demanding that human dignity as a political issue be reckoned with; and when regimes failed to respond they fell. Human rights triumphed as a crucial determinant governing the relationship between state and society.

Perhaps these events are most striking to me because I had the chance, as chairman and cochairman of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Euorpe, to witness the old regimes first hand. Only 3 years ago, in 1987, at a time when many of this country's experts were convinced that Communist regimes would never give up their power without a vicious struggle, I went to Czechoslovakia to meet with its Communist authorities, as well as religious figures, dissidents, and private citizens. The degree of repression which marked that country was evident when I tried to meet with representatives of the human rights initiative, charter 77. Three of them, Vaclav Havel, Jiri Dienstbier, and Petr Uhl, were arrested to prevent them from even talking with the Helsinki Commission.

Today, Vaclav Havel is President of his country; Jiri Dienstbier is Czechoslovakia's Foreign Minister; and Petr Uhl is the head of the state news agency. But these are only the most obvious manifestations of fundamental changes which are taking place every day in Czechoslovakia. Czechoslovakia is transforming itself, from its political structure to its school system to its artistic and cultural life to its economy. One of the most encouraging changes has taken place in relations between the United States and Czechoslovakia.

When President Havel spoke before this Congress earlier this year, the relationship between Czechoslovakia and the United States was a constant refrain in his remarks. Indeed, his speech was testimony to the fact that the historical friendship between our two countries could not be destroyed by 45 years of propaganda. President Havel remarked, "Twice in this century, the world has been threatened by a catastrophe; twice this catastrophe was born in Europe, and twice, you Americans, along with others, were called upon to save Europe, the whole world, and yourselves." In the postwar era, Havel described the United States as a "defender of freedom," which "contributed to the salvation of us Europeans, of the world and thus of yourselves for a third time: you have helped us survive until today." Now Havel says, Czechoslovakia "must learn many things from you, from how to educate our offspring, how to elect our representatives, all the way to how to organize our economic life." But the legacy of communism will not be eradicated overnight. As President Havel sadly described, the Communist type of totalitarian system has left "a legacy of countless dead, an infinite spectrum of human suffering, profound economic decline and, above all, enormous human humilitation." The task of rebuilding these societies lies ahead for all.

I believe there is much the United States can and must do for the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic—including extending MFN. But this is no act of charity; by extending our contacts and developing our relations with this country, so deeply enriched by its profound experiences with democracy, we reinvigorate our own democracy. President Havel has noted that when Thomas Jefferson wrote of "just powers," he backed up those words with his life. "It was not just words, it was his deeds as well." We should now back up our stated commitment to democracy by extending most-favored-nation trading status to Czechoslovakia, a fellow democracy in the community of nations.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 649, legislation approving the extension of nondiscriminatory treatment—most-favored-nation treatment—to the products of Czechoslovakia, which minority leader MICHEL and I introduced.

In the new world in which we live, adversaries are becoming allies, and the tools of aid and trade are standing alongside military hardware as the means by which we build nations and relationships between them. As Czechoslovakia went through its democratic revolution last year, many of us in Congress asked what the United States could do to speed that nation's movement toward political and economic reform.

One way to help the Czechs lift themselves economically and consolidate their political reforms is by normalizing the trade relationship which exists between our two countries. American consumers and Czech producers both stand to gain by the reduction of American tariffs placed on their goods. This resolution seeks to do precisely that.

Under current law, we cannot extend nondiscriminatory trade treatment to goods made in Czechoslovakia. Under the Jackson-Vanik amendment, countries must meet specific freedom of emigration requirements in order for the President to grant most-favored-nation [MFN] status to a nonmarket economy.

On February 20, 1990, President Bush waived application of sections of the Trade Act with respect to Czechoslovakia based upon a determination that such a waiver would substantially promote the act's objectives relating to freedom of emigration. The waiver made Czechoslovakia eligible immediately for United States Government credits, credit guarantees, and investment guarantees.

On April 12, a bilateral trade agreement was signed by U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills and Czechoslovak Foreign Trade Minister Andrej Barcak. At that time, side letters on trade and financial matters, intellectual property rights, and tourism were signed.

This resolution signifies more than the fact that Czechoslovakia now meets our emigration requirements. It signifies our resolve in Congress to do what we can to reward the people who fought for freedom in Eastern Europe. It represents our commitment to economic growth in the post-cold-war world.

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution granting most-favored-nation trade status to Czechoslovakia.

As we all know, in order to be eligible for consideration, a nation must agree to meet certain freedom of emigration requirements. Czechoslovakia, prior to succumbing to Hitler and prior to being engulfed by communism, had been a beacon of freedom for its own citizens and for others around the world and is regaining that status today.

Today, as the nations of Eastern Europe—including Czechoslovakia—throw off the shackles of oppression, they have an underlying need to develop a solid economic base in order to withstand any threats to their freedom. This resolution will provide that kind of stabilization for Czechoslovakia.

Another factor in Czechoslovakia's behalf is its trading record with us. Over the past 10 years, from 1980 to 1990, the United States shipped goods worth $7.591 billion to Czechoslovakia, and bought goods worth $7.577 billion from them.

This is almost a dollar-for-dollar match, and it looks like this relatively equal trading balance will continue. For the first 7 months of this year, American exports to Czechoslovakia totaled $32.7 million, while imports from them to the United States totaled $46 million.

We haven't even come close to getting this good of a deal from Japan, one of our so-called trading partners. In fact, when it comes to Japan, we're not even in the same ballpark.

That's why I support this resolution. Whatever we would lose in terms of import tariffs will be more than worthwhile in comparison to the benefits from giving Czechoslovakia most-favored-nation trade status.

Judging from this Nation's pre-Hitler and precommunism history, and considering our leadership role in encouraging humanitarian oriented, and democratic governments, it is more than appropriate to extend this small assistance to help Czechoslovakia maintain a stable eonomy.

With economic stability, the voice of this smaller nation can, in all reality, become a leading voice of freedom among nations still struggling to poke their heads above the blanket of oppression.

I urge all of my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 649.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Resolution 486 was laid on the table.

REMEMBERING PERSIAN GULF CASUALTIES

(Mr. ERDREICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Speaker, last week our U.S. military suffered four fatal air crashes in the Persian Gulf. Twelve crewmembers lost their lives. Two of those, Maj. Barry K. Henderson and Lt. Col. Stephen G. Schramm, were Birmingham-based Air National Guardsmen. Lieutenant Colonel Schramm lived in Jefferson County in my congressional district.

Lieutenant Colonel Schramm was a 43-year-old master navigator. Both he and Major Henderson were members of the 106th Squadron of the 117th Tactical Reconnaissance Wing, which has about 115 members and six aircraft deployed in the gulf. The squadron's RF-4C Phantoms fly low and fast to photograph enemy positions.

Stephen Schramm, son of a World War II Navy fighter pilot, worked as an engineer for one of our utility companies, Southern Company Services. On weekends, he flew for our Alabama Air National Guard. When this conflict broke out in the gulf, he volunteered to go. As a veteran who flew hundreds of missions in Vietnam, he felt his experience was needed in this new crisis.

Lieutenant Colonel Schramm's wife, Mrs. Cynthia Schramm, also is employed by Southern Company Services. They have two children, a daughter, Kim, who attends Auburn University, and a son, Jeff, who attends the University of Alabama.

I join with all Alabamians and Americans in expressing our heartfelt sympathy to the families of Lieutenant Colonel Schramm, Major Henderson, and the other crewmen who have given their lives while serving during Operation Desert Shield.

Cmdr. Jerry Coffee, a former American POW who was held in Vietnam, wrote these lines about—

. . . Our hearty comrades who have fallen from the skies,
And were gently caught by God's own hands to be with him on high.
To dwell among the soaring clouds they've known so well before,
From victory roll to tail chase, at heaven's very door.
As we fly among them there,
We're sure to hear their plea,
Take care my friend,
Watch your six,
And do just one more roll for me.

Following are editorials published in the Birmingham News and the Birmingham Post-Herald, expressing our community and Nation's pride in the bravery of these two men and our grief on their tragic deaths:

[From the Birmingham News, Oct. 10, 1990]

CASUALTIES OF WAR

That so many Alabamians have been assigned to Operation Desert Shield in the Persian Gulf increases the chances that some of those soldiers, sailors and airmen might not come back safely.

Anticipating that neighbors and friends may be among the casualties, however, does not make it any easier to take when that actually happens.

Our prayers go out to the families of Maj. Barry K. Henderson, 40, a senior pilot from Tuscumbia, and Maj. Stephen G. Schramm, 43, a master navigator from Birmingham, two Alabama Air National Guardsmen killed Monday when their RF-4C Phantom jet crashed in Saudi Arabia.

Maj. Henderson and Maj. Schramm were killed during a training flight over the southern Saudi Arabia peninsula. These fine men who volunteered for Persian Gulf duty will be missed by all who knew them.

We hope their families and friends will be consoled by the knowledge that they followed a trail blazed hundreds of years ago and traced by thousands of other Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice for their country.

[From the Birmingham Post-Herald, Oct. 10, 1990]

WE'VE LOST 2 GOOD MEN

Those who serve in the armed forces are trained to face the possibility of death at any time, if not in actual combat with an enemy, then in the course of carrying out duties that will always be inherently dangerous.

But the fact that Maj. Stephen G. Schramm of Birmingham and Maj. Barry K.

Henderson of Tuscumbia were aware of the risks they took as members of the Alabama Air National Guard doesn't make it any easier to accept their deaths.

Alabama, and the nation, lost two good men when their Phantom jet crashed Monday while on a mission associated with Operation Desert Shield, the U.S. military effort to protect Saudi Arabia from invasion by the forces of Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein.

Schramm and Henderson were not full-time military men. Like other members of the Air Guard's 117th Tactical Reconnaissance Wing, they were normally weekend warriors who kept up their military training in the event they might be needed to augment the regular Air Force. When the call came, though, they and the rest of the unit stepped forward to volunteer for active duty.

Schramm and Henderson were not the first casualties in Operation Desert Shield. Unfortunately, they won't be the last, either. It is a price that sometimes must be paid to protect freedom.

Our condolences to the families and friends of Stephen Shramm and Barry Henderson, two brave men who answered the call of duty.

DARKE COUNTY, OH: IN HOG HEAVEN

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks. And include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, there is good news for Darke County, OH, today. "We're No. 1 in Ohio in Agricultural production. The Ohio State Department of Agriculture has ranked Darke as No. 1 of all 88 Ohio counties in total 1989 farm production.

These gross receipts have Darke No. 1 in hog production, No. 1 in poultry and sheep production, No. 2 in soybean production, No. 3 in corn production, No. 6 in cattle and calf production, No. 8 in wheat production and No. 9 in dairy products production. This is truly remarkable as they competed against 87 counties in Ohio.

The farmers and their families, are responsible for Darke's success, but Dennis Baker, the county's Agricultural Extension Agent should be singled out and recognized.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure I can boast on this most recent achievement of Darke County, OH. They certainly have earned Ohio's bragging rights.

That is the good news. The bad news is that the Democrat $190 billion tax bill passed last will increase the tax of every one of my Darke County farmers.

DARKE No. 1—Leads State Agriculture in Receipts

(By Bill Booker)

There's good news for Darke County today.

"We're Number One" again fits to a "T."

The State Department of Agriculture has ranked Darke as topping all 88 Ohio counties in the just released total 1989 gross receipts in farm products.

In attaining that level, Darke unseats Mercer County and returns to a level this county held for a number of years.

Both Dennis Baker, the county's Agricultural Extension Agent and Ted Finnarn, of the Darke County Farmers Union, were understandably quite pleased with the news.

Said Baker, "This re-states our strong agricultural base. Whether we're number one or even number two doesn't always have a marked different effect on every individual farmer, but overall it's really great to be on top."

He went on to say that the effect on this county from the income standpoint is positive, strengthening the overall, total economic base.

Finnarn, who mirrored those feelings, said, "I feel it's just great to be back on top in the state. It's just plain good news for everyone, farmers or not."

He cited the below figures for seven major agricultural divisions, saying Darke County's strong showing in hogs and poultry, helped bring up the other five areas where a No. 1 posting was not indicated.

Jim Holzapfel, executive secretary of the Darke County Chamber of Commerce, was elated at the news. "That's great. Now we have the bragging rights back here. I guess Mercer County will have to take down their No. 1 sign they have up there."

The following is a breakdown of the total gross receipts, followed by the seven areas and how the state's counties ranked during 1989.

SENATE—Wednesday, October 17, 1990

(Legislative day of Tuesday, October 2, 1990)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable CHARLES S. ROBB, a Senator from the State of Virginia.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

*King Belshazzar gave a great banquet for a thousand of his nobles and drank wine with them. While Belshazzar was drinking his wine, he gave orders to bring in the gold and silver goblets that Nebuchadnezzar his father had taken from the temple in Jerusalem, so that the king and his nobles, his wives and his concubines might drink from them. So they brought in the gold goblets that had been taken from the temple of God in Jerusalem, and the king and his nobles, his wives and his concubines drank from them. As they drank the wine, they praised the gods of gold and silver, of bronze, iron, wood and stone. Suddenly the fingers of a human hand appeared and wrote on the plaster of the wall, near the lampstand in the royal palace. The king watched the hand as it wrote. * * * This is the inscription that was written: Mene, Mene, Tekel, Parsin. This is what these words mean: Mene: God has numbered the days of your reign and brought it to an end. Tekel: You have been weighed on the scales and found wanting. Peres: Your kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians.*—Daniel 5:1-5, 25-28.

Eternal God, infinite in truth and justice, it is so easy to dismiss the idea of Divine judgment, righteous judgment. So easy, also, to miss the fact that that judgment often comes as a consequence of our decisions and choices. We demand freedom to choose, but we deny the reality of inevitable consequences. Daniel reminds us of the judgment of God on a Babylonian King—ancient Babylon—modern Iraq. Guide us as a nation lest we by our choices, our decisions, our actions, suffer the same awful judgment—our days numbered and ended, weighed on the scale and found wanting. Help us, Lord, not to fail, not to miss the boat, not to be found wanting in our responsibility.

In His name who lived and sacrificed. Amen.

THE NATIONAL COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to make a few comments about the conference report to S. 1430 that we passed last evening. I was pleased to support this conference agreement, as I believe it will do much to encourage and nurture a sense of community service in many of our youth.

Early in this Congress I introduced a small bill, S. 689, "The Kids Helping Kids Act." That bill proposed helping create school-based programs providing community service opportunities for students. In particular, my bill proposed assisting programs that get high school students helping their fellow students, and which worked service opportunities into school curriculums.

I am pleased that some of the ideas in that bill were incorporated into this bill. I commend those who helped create, and who worked to put this conference report together.

PROMOTING DEMOCRACY IN THE SOVIET UNION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this morning I would like to say a few words about what our policies should be toward promoting democratic reforms in the Soviet Union. In this respect, I wish to draw the attention of the Members of the Senate to an important article by Ilya Zaslavsky that appeared in the summer 1990 issue of the Journal of Democracy, which is published by the National Endowment for Democracy.

As the reform process continues in the Soviet Union, our policies should seek to promote the development of genuine democratic processes in that country. This would serve not only the interests of the Soviet people. It would also advance our geopolitical and humanitarian interests, as well as the interests of global peace and stability. The less repressive and more democratic the Soviet Union becomes, the less aggressive and more cooperative Moscow is likely to be. To form our policy, we need to understand which leaders in the Soviet Union are the genuine advocates of democracy—Mikhail Gorbachev and his circle of supporters from the Communist Party or the new radical reformers who are challenging Gorbachev's supremacy.

Mr. Zaslavsky, a member of the Soviet Congress of People's Deputies and the chairman of the Oktyabrsky District Council in Moscow, is one of the genuine democratic figures in the Soviet Union today. Unlike Mr. Gorbachev, Mr. Zaslavsky believes in pure representative democracy, rather than the present system of partial democracy in which key powers and electoral controls remain in the hands of the Communist Party. Moreover, Mr. Zaslavsky has faced the voters in competitive elections and won decisively, while Mr. Gorbachev has always run unopposed contests for the offices he has held.

I do not mean to diminish the importance of the reforms that Mr. Gorbachev has undertaken. He has permitted vastly more freedom of expression in the Soviet press and for the Soviet people than his predecessors. He has allowed some competitive elections for legislative bodies. But he has not advocated unalloyed democracy. He has always sought to retain for himself and for the Communist Party exclusive powers beyond the control of Soviet electorate.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Reformers like Mr. Zaslavsky constitutes a grassroots movement for real democracy in the Soviet Union. They represent the wave of the future in the Soviet system because they are winning the support of the people, who have nothing but contempt for the Communist system under which they have suffered for three-quarters of a century. As Mr. Zaslavsky describes:

In practice, the democratic movement consists of a multitude of more or less organized structural components, such as popular fronts, voters' associations, and various cultural and educational societies with a democratic orientation. These organizations have begun forming umbrella groups called civic action committees, based on the principle of representation for all organized progressive forces. Although lacking any formal power whatsoever, these committees will be capable, by virtue of their moral authority, of decisively influencing the situation in particular regions and in the country as a whole.

We need to understand the political forces at work in the Soviet Union if we are to formulate a policy that promotes democratic values and secures our interests. For those who wish to read an insightful analysis of the current situation, I commend this important article by Mr. Zaslavsky.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESSING FOR DEMOCRACY IN THE U.S.S.R.

(By Ilya Zaslavsky)

As the entire world knows, the Soviet Union now has perestroika, democracy, and, of course, the world's most popular political leader who started it all—Mikhail Gorbachev. About Mikhail Gorbachev and the reforms he launched five years ago, there can be no disagreement. It is an indisputable fact that before we lived in one kind of society, and now we are trying to create another. Only one question remains: Are we creating a democracy, or is it something else?

The whole world believes it is a democracy. And indeed, we have chosen a parliament, and all sorts of people are arguing there, expressing a wide—sometimes even too wide—variety of opinions, voting on various proposals, passing resolutions by a majority of votes. It is true that, as a rule, this parliament approves either proposals handed down from above—from the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, from the government, from Gorbachev himself—so slightly edited versions thereof. But that cannot be helped. If these laws have been passed by the majority, then it is democracy.

But . . . we should ask ourselves a question. How was this majority formed? It is well known that during the 1989 elections to the Congress of People's Deputies of the USSR, the winning candidates in some districts ran unopposed, which reveals something of a flaw in our democracy. It is also well known that one-third of the deputies in the Soviet parliament were chosen by the executive bodies of public organizations (and not such all organizations, but only some of them). This too has been seen as a distortion of our democracy. Finally, there was still another distortion in our electoral process: in 1989 there were special preelection meetings where a few hundred people, chosen in a rather arbitrary way and certainly not representing the opinions of all the voters in the district, decided which candidates should stay on the list and which should be stricken from it.

But even that is not the end of it. For there were two more major flaws in our parliamentary elections. First, in many districts where there were two or more candidates, they all represented one and the same platform, that of the Communist Party (CPSU). In other words, the only choice available was between personalities, not ideas. Thus all votes were effectively cast for the same program, that of the Central Committee of the CPSU.

Second, even in districts where there was a competition of ideas, the candidates who followed the Central Committee line enjoyed enormous advantages. Such "correct" candidates were supplied with whole brigades of campaigners and copying machines, and were given access to the press. They also benefited from the support of Communist organizations at various enterprises and of the so-called "Soviet veterans"—persons retired from official positions who, as a rule, unquestioningly support Communist Party policy.

For all these reasons, the debates between the minority and the majority at the sessions of the Congress of People's Deputies and the Supreme Soviet of the USSR are not in the same category as the traditional debates in Western parliamentary systems between a democratically elected majority and a democratically elected minority. It would be more accurate, in our case, to speak of debates between an undemocratically elected majority and a democratically elected minority—though of course there are exceptions on each side. For instance, People's Deputies Andrei Sakharov and Gavriil Popov, though they joined the democratic minority, were elected not by popular vote but by a public organization, the USSR Academy of Sciences.

These exceptions notwithstanding, the rule is this: the passage of resolutions in our esteemed parliament is democratic in form rather than in substance. The balance of forces in the legislative body is not the same as in the population. This can be easily ascertained by comparing the results of several parliamentary votes on key issues with the results of public opinion polls.

The determination of the conservative parliamentary majority to keep Article 6 [guaranteeing the Communist Party's monopoly on power] in the Soviet Constitution for at least a while longer seemed especially defiant. It was also quite illogical, because to the delight of nearly everyone in this country and abroad the power of the party is being dismantled. This process is being directed both from above (the February plenum of the CPSU Central Committee, which called for the alteration of Article 6, is one example), and from below (by the efforts of the democratic movement both within and outside the party).

A careful observer, however, can see a basic difference between these two aspects of the process, the downward-directed and the upward-directed. The effort to break the CPSU's monopoly from below seeks to create a democratic, multiparty parliamentary system; while the effort to break its monopoly from above seeks to replace one-party dictatorship with one-man dictatorship. It was with this goal in mind that one of the most reactionary laws generated by perestroika, a law I would even describe as ultra-monarchist—the Law on Presidential Powers in the USSR—was so decisively, so unceremoniously, and so quickly pushed through the parliament. The powers that be were perfectly aware that their only chance to salvage the dictatorship of the nomenklatura was a rapid and aggressive assault on an obedient legislative body, at a time when it was still possible to have a vote of the undemocratic majority instead of a direct popular vote.

The gap between the people and its alleged parliament leads to difficult social conflicts, growing tensions and, as we say these days, to the rocking of an already unstable boat. Popular discontent with the content and pace of decisions by the country's legislative body is expressed through rallies, demonstrations, and strikes—not to mention hunger strikes, unauthorized takeovers of government officials' summer homes, and other excesses.

All these actions, of course, are criticized by the authorities. The strikes, we are told, undermine the economy, while rallies distract people from their jobs. Both claims are partially true, though rallies and strikes are often the only way the people have to force their "chosen" representatives to make concessions and speed up economic and political reforms. And the delay of such reforms does much more harm to the economy than any strikes ever could.

To some degree, grassroots actions bridge the gap between the policies pursued by the legislative body and the policies that the people want—policies that could also help get the country out of its present crisis. At the same time, the scope of popular disturbances and the number of people involved keep growing, thereby creating the preconditions for the emergence of a new kind of dialogue between the people and the government. Such dialogue could take the form of a "roundtable discussion" between representatives of the upper echelons of the official power structure and representatives of a mass democratic movement with its own structure and its own influence exercised through collective action.

This broad-based democratic movement has emerged and is developing as a result of the dissatisfaction of the majority of the population with the current situation. It is further prodded and provoked by the actions of those in the upper echelons of power—both the right and the so-called "center."

In practice, the democratic movement of a multitude of more or less organized structural components, such as popular fronts, voters' associations, and various cultural and educational societies with a democratic orientation. These organizations have begun forming umbrella groups called civic action committees, based on the principle of representation for all organized progressive forces. Although lacking any formal power whatsoever, these committees will be capable, by virtue of their moral authority, of decisively influencing the situation in particular regions and in the country as a whole.

The idea of the theorists of the democratic movement is that these civic action committees must, in the near future, become a sort of unofficial parliament for the democratic forces—just as the official power structure usually functions as a parliament of the conservative forces. Then, the interaction between these two parliaments—the conservative one and the democratic one—should eventually yield a compromise satisfying to the majority of the population, and hence to the democrats, since according to public opinion polls the majority of the population shares the democratic point of view. Thus, in the Oktyabrsky District of Moscow, where I was elected a People's Deputy in 1989, approximately 60 percent of the citizenry supports private property.

The development of structures of a broad-based democratic movement, and the involvement of these structures in the electoral process, make it quite probable that mid-level and lower-level elected bodies will more or less accurately reflect the interests of the people—that is, will be truly democratic. Thus, the 1990 elections to local and other bodies of authority offered good opportunities. The elections in the Baltic republics have been the harbinger of democracy. There, alternative structures—the republics' popular fronts—won by a landslide, bringing these peoples' dream of self-determination very close to reality. The results of the municipal elections in Moscow as a whole—and in my district of Oktyabrsky—have also been positive, with democratic forces winning an absolute majority. Gavriil Popov was elected chairman of the Moscow City Council, and I was chosen as chairman of the Oktyabrsky District Council.

Thus, in parts of the country—districts, cities, republics—there is a realistic prospect of bringing government under democratic control. At the same time, the uneven distribution of the democratic forces throughout the country will necessitate the coexistence, within the framework of the same central state, of regions with democratic-dominated and conservative-dominated local authorities. Such a situation is normal in the West, where different regions of the same country may be controlled by rival but essentially democratic parties: here, however, it is complicated by the authoritarian or totalitarian outlook of Soviet conservatives, who tend to be proponents of "barracks style socialism" and show a truly Bolshevist intolerance toward dissenting views, especially democratic ones.

At the same time, the existence of jurisdictions where democrats control local government can boost the democratic process throughout the Soviet Union. They can be an inspiration to other regions; moreover, democratic local councils can actively support popular movements and assist the work of civic action committees in neighboring nondemocratic regions.

The increase in the number of prodemocracy jurisdictions will inevitably step up the pressure on the upper echelons of power. This pressure must be brought to bear not only through strikes, rallies, and demonstrations, but also through the actions of local councils in various regions. By adopting resolutions and pressing the central legislature, local bodies can further the cause of demoractic reform. We hope that in this way our country can successfully navigate through narrow and dangerous straits to early elections for a genuinely democratic parliament of the USSR—a new legislative body that will reflect the true hopes and convictions of our people.

THE ANTARCTIC PROTECTION ACT OF 1990

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased that late last night the Senate unanimously passed a bill I introduced earlier this year which offers protection to the environment in Antarctica well into the next century. S. 2575 the Antarctica Protection Act of 1990 places a long-term moratorium on mineral resource activities in the Antarctic and urges the Secretary of State to negotiate such a long-term prohibition at the upcoming special consultative meeting opening in Santiago, Chile, in November.

Mr. President, the Antarctic plays an important and unique role in our global ecosystem. Ninety percent of the Earth's ice and 70 percent of the Earth's fresh water are found there. It is an integral part of the Earth's climate system.

The Antarctic supports large populations of marine life from krill and plankton to whales, seals, and sea birds. It holds untold answers to the Earth's evolution and the world's future climate.

Today, scientists have just begun to understand the vital role the continent of Antarctica plays in regulating the Earth's temperature. Antarctica provides science with an as yet unsullied vantage point from which to monitor our changing planet. Much of Antarctica remains today as it has for millions of years. Barren and bountiful, a massive ice cap encases all but 2 percent of the continent, while the surrounding ocean brims with life.

Development in the Antarctic is a new environmental concern. Many scientists believe that development is likely to cause ice caps to melt, which would not only cause sea levels to rise, but would also reduce the ocean's absorption capacity for carbon dioxide. Currently oceans take up one-third to one-half of the world's carbon dioxide emissions which we know to be one of the main greenhouse gases. This change could add significantly to global climate change.

In recent years, demand for access and use of resources in Antarctica has grown. As uses grow, so has the potential for environmental degradation. Oil-spills and water pollution from toxic chemicals, raw sewage, and solid wastes have already been reported in this environmentally sensitive area.

Currently, the United States and other nations face major policy decisions surrounding the development of the Antarctic. Traditionally, Antarctica has remained peaceful because it has had few things to fight over. However, several countries are now interested in development. Development of oil and minerals, tourism, fisheries, increased research all which have led to the debate of environmental protection versus inappropriate development.

Oil and mineral development first became a concern in the early 1970's when we faced an oil crisis worldwide. Consequently, member nations of the Antarctic Treaty, recognizing the need to address the question of future development came together to hammer out new rules governing oil and mineral exploration. This resulted in the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities known as CRAMRA. CRAMRA was agreed upon by the 20 treaty nations in 1988. The purpose of the agreement was to protect Antarctica from the dangerous environmental effects of oil and mineral development. However, the international agreement instead of protecting the Antarctic from mineral resource development, established a framework under which mining and drilling could take place in the most unspoiled environment on Earth.

In my view, Mr. President, the agreement falls far short of its goal. Some have called the agreement a "road map to development." France and Australia have already withdrawn their support from the agreement, and several other nations such as New Zealand and Italy are currently considering doing so soon. The U.S. Government would be wise to follow suit, particularly since the U.S. Senate recently passed a resolution introduced by Senator GORE which urges the President to put aside the existing CRAMRA and negotiate a new comprehensive protective agreement. Under the Antarctic Treaty system, all agreements must be unanimous.

The purpose of my legislation is to ensure that mineral resource activities do not occur in the Antarctic. Last month the Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously passed the bill I introduced which established a permanent prohibition on all mineral resource activities in Antarctica. Let me reiterate—unanimously passed the bill with a permanent ban. Mr. President, the House Foreign Affairs Committee took similar action a few weeks ago on a bill introduced by my colleague from Massachusetts, Representative SILVIO CONTE. And both committees took this action despite strong opposition from the Bush administration. The vote could not be more clear—the congressional committees responsible for foreign policy issues unanimously voted for a permanent ban on mineral resource activities in Antarctica.

However, the State Department, speaking on behalf of the President, threatened a veto of the legislation which overwhelmingly passed the Senate Foreign Relations Committee—exhibiting what I consider to be an unfortunate view toward the fragility of Antarctica. Parenthetically, I might add the Foreign Relations Committee has the authority to approve all international treaties.

The State Department, working on behalf of the President, exhorted us not to tie their hands in Chile next month. We were told that the administration wanted to leave their options open for the future in Antarctica and for potential technological breakthroughs in oil and gas development. Well, Mr. President I have witnessed why this administration enjoys leaving options open in the future when it comes to mineral resources activities. Let us look at the facts. The administration continues to exercise the option to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska for oil development; and year after year the President has opted to recommend drilling for oil and gas on Georges Bank, MA prime fishing grounds and whale watching area; and, in the most recent budget proposal, the President opted to offer tax incentives to the oil industry for new oil and gas exploration and development. It is fairly obvious what the administration means by keeping their options open when it comes to Antarctica.

My aim, Mr. President, has been to work for the most protective legislative initiative I could in order to set a tone of Antarctic protection at the upcoming meeting in Chile. Working for weeks, finally, we have developed legislation which, although it does not require a permanent ban, does insist upon a long term moratorium on mineral resource activities. Speaking as the framer of this new initiative, my message could not be more clear. America's negotiators must develop a comprehensive approach toward the protection of Antarctica and must lead the consultative treaty participants in establishing a minimal long term moratorium on mineral activities of at least 100 years.

The pressures of the situation in the Persian Gulf adds significantly to the quest to find more oil and gas worldwide. Shortsighted fixes such as opening up Antarctica for prospecting of mineral resources does not offer meaningful long term solutions. And this legislation is designed to prevent such myopic thinking.

This legislation will provide the needed protection for Antarctica. It provides an indefinite ban, expected to be at least 100 years or more, on all mineral exploration and development in Antarctica by United States entities, and it directs the Secretary of State to urge other nations to take the same position. It also recommends that the Secretary of State ask other nations to adopt an international accord which grants Antarctica special status as an international wilderness park dedicated to science designed to provide wilderness protection through international cooperation and scientific research.

Mr. President, in April Senator GORE and I and other Senators hosted an Interparliamentary Conference on the Environment. Over 150 parliamentarians representing 36 nations attended. I chaired the Water Resource Committee in which we discussed the future of the Antarctic. Capt. Jacque Cousteau who has dedicated significant time and effort to preserving the Antarctic helped lead the discussion in our working group. We all agreed that in order to protect the Antarctic, we must first extend the current moratorium on exploration and exploitation of mineral and energy resources until we are able to negotiate an ongoing prohibition in mineral mining activities among the Antarctica Treaty nations. We also agreed that we must grant Antarctica special protective status as a Land of Science Treaty Reserve and International Wilderness Area.

In closing Mr. President I want to thank the Alliance for Antarctica which is made up of 13 groups interested in preserving and protecting Antarctica's future for generations to come. They have worked hard on this legislative initiative and others which will provide environmental protection for this unique area.

I want to thank my colleagues for supporting this legislation which will send the right message worldwide, that the Antarctic is a unique environmental resource of global significance and it must be protected from harmful development.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 2,041st day that Terry Anderson has been held captive in Beirut.

EISENHOWER LEGACY OF CARING FOR TROOPS PERSISTS IN THE ARMED FORCES BENEFIT ASSOCIATION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I take special note of the 100th anniversary of the birth of one of America's most distinguished generals: Dwight David Eisenhower.

General Eisenhower's legacy is still of special significance to military personnel and their families. Senator INOUYE has commented on the need to ensure benefits for our serving military personnel. My friend from Ohio, Senator GLENN, has taken the admirable initiative, supported by many of us in the Senate, to ensure that the basic allowance for subsistence, a payment which is suspended when troops are deployed to combat areas, can be recaptured through other pay and allowances.

The theme of caring for the troops was never better enunciated by word and deed than was done by General Eisenhower. As the Supreme Allied Commander, with jurisdiction over the largest American Army ever assembled in World War II, Ike moved to protect members of the Armed Forces from the awful costs of combat service.

In 1947, Ike formed the Armed Forces Benefit Association, a nonprofit, tax-exempt, federally chartered association dedicated to providing care for the men and women of our Armed Forces. The organization's purpose was, and remains; "to promote the general welfare of its members for the mutual benefit of all."

Since its founding, AFBA has provided $300 million in death benefits to the survivors of casualties from the Korean and Vietnam conflicts through its life insurance programs which, Mr. President, I hasten to add excludes that awful restriction that all military people fear: the so-called "war clause" that suspends insurance coverage if one is killed in combat.

AFBA's board of directors today includes some of our most distinguished military leaders, including the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Colin Powell. The board makes sure that AFBA is responsive to the needs of our men and women serving in Saudi today and, I hope, will continue to provide care for our forces well into the next decade and century.

I ask all my colleagues in the Senate to join with me in commemorating Ike's birthday in applauding one of his great legacies, the Armed Forces Benefit Association.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon, the House of Representatives approved the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 by a vote of 273 to 154. This legislation now goes to President Bush, who has said he will veto it.

But the President still has time to reject the misguided advice of his misguided advisers and heed the legitimate call for simple justice for the millions of minorities and women who bear the burden of bigotry on the job.

Perhaps we can override a veto in Congress. But it should never come to that. I hope that President Bush will reconsider the unwise and unjustified course he is on. This bill is a civil rights bill, not a quota bill. It deserves the President's support and his signature, not a divisive Presidential veto.

As we have seen in the many months of this debate, it is easy for discriminatory employers to hide behind the false hue and cry of quotas. But anyone who takes an independent and objective look at this bill will see at a glance that the quota argument is a sham. As clearly as any argument can be, it is refuted by the facts.

The simple truth behind this bill is that we don't have to guess about what will happen if President Bush signs it. We know what will happen, because we know what happened for 18 years while the provisions of this bill were the law of the land.

All we are doing in the Civil Rights Act of 1990, so far as this issue is concerned, is reversing a Supreme Court decision in 1989 that overturned 18 years of civil rights case law between 1971 and 1989. We are restoring the law, not extending it or otherwise changing it.

In hundreds of antidiscrimination cases decided in those 18 years, the law on equal employment opportunity was used to strike down discriminatory practices that deny a fair chance for women and minorities to participate fully in the workplace.

All that Congress is doing in this legislation is restoring the law in effect between 1971 and 1989. The old law never led any employer to adopt quotas, and the new law won't either.

So I say this to President Bush: "Mr. President, ask your Attorney General a simple question. Ask him to explain how this bill can possibly be a quota bill, if the exact same rule of law we are restoring never led to quotas for 18 years in the past.

Mr. President, when so much is at stake, do not rely solely on your justice department lawyers and your White House counsel who are so bent on killing this bill.

Mr. President, listen to the other side of the argument, before you take an action that may well make you the anti-civil rights President for the rest of your term.

Mr. President, before you cast a veto, I challenge you to ask a neutral panel of Republican lawyers whom you respect to examine the provisions that have caused all this controversy.

Ask them for their views about whether this is a civil rights bill or a quota bill.

I can assure you, Mr. President, that there are a number of Republican Sentors who may well vote to sustain a veto out of loyalty to you, but who want to see this bill signed, and who believe it should be signed.

Ask them, Mr. President, whether they think this is a civil rights bill or a quota bill.

I believe they will agree that in the long and difficult negotiations over this bill, we have gone the extra mile together to eliminate any reasonable objection that this legislation might somehow lead to quotas.

The only thing we are not willing to include, Mr. President, is language that would make discrimination more likely.

In the view of many of us, Mr. President, you are being misled by a small group of advisers into bowing to those in the business community trying to escape the liability they deserve for acts of job discrimination.

Some businesses oppose giving women and religious minorities the same remedy for intentional discrimination that racial minorities have under current law.

Other employers are hoping to escape any penalty when they engage in sexual harassment and other particularly offensive forms of discrimination in the workplace.

They know that their actions cannot stand the light of day. So they have seized on the quota argument in a devious attempt to block this vitally needed civil rights bill.

Reject that cynical strategy, Mr. President. Do not be misled into accepting any such big lie strategy by some of your business supporters.

Mr. President, You are the President of all the people. You owe it to Congress and the country to take a fair, unbiased, and independent look at this bill. If you do, I am confident you will sign it, because women and minorities deserve the same civil rights that all other Americans have.

NEHEMIAH HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise to discuss with the distinguished chairman of the Housing Subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee the implementation of the Nehemiah Housing Opportunity Grants Program. The Nehemiah Program was originally enacted as part of the 1987 Housing Act to provide new permanent owner-occupied housing for low- and moderate-income families and to establish stable neighborhoods in distressed areas. The program is structured to leverage a relatively small amount of Federal seed money with funds provided from other sources, including State and local governments, nonprofit organizations, and other resources. This program is an innovative, community-based initiative that will make home ownership a reality for many families who otherwise would not be able to purchase a home. Grants are provided under the program to eligible nonprofit sponsors who apply, and the first round of grants was made by HUD in August 1988.

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator from Maryland correctly describes the Nehemiah Program, and I share his interest in this innovative program. One of the most important features of this program is the requirement that grants be made to nonprofit organizations that the Secretary of HUD has found meet certain standards. Eligible nonprofit sponsors must have a voluntary board, a tax exemption ruling, and must demonstrate that the project has been developed with input from residents of the neighborhood where the project is located. In addition, the application must be approved by the local government.

Mr. SARBANES. One of the most attractive features of this program is the combination of resources that can be used to restore blighted areas. In order for a Nehemiah project to work, the nonprofit sponsor of a Nehemiah project would also need to be eligible to receive other Federal, State, local, and private funds that are committed to the project. Is that correct?

Mr. CRANSTON. Absolutely, the only way the Nehemiah concept can work is if the Federal Nehemiah grant funds can be used in conjuction with other leveraged funds; and it doesn't make any sense to have separate entities administering funds intended for the same project. This is one of the key elements of the program.

Mr. SARBANES. I understand there has recently been some confusion about the use of funds from the CDBG Program in conjunction with the Nehemiah Program. In Baltimore, MD, and perhaps in other areas that have Nehemiah projects, HUD has questioned whether the approved Nehemiah nonprofit sponsor is eligible as a subgrantee under the CDBG Program. I regret that this issue has delayed implementation of the Nehemiah project in Baltimore and hope that it can be resolved promply. Congress clearly intented that the entity that is eligible for the Nehemiah grant should also be able to administer the other resources that are part of the combined project.

Mr. CRANSTON. There is no doubt Congress intended that Nehemiah nonprofit sponsors can also receive assistance as eligible neighborhood-based nonprofit organizations under the CDBG Program. The laws and regulations for these two programs must be read together in order to avoid implementation delay and confusion.

AIDS UPDATE

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, according to the Centers for Disease Control, as of September 30, 152,126 Americans have been diagnosed with AIDS; 92,401 Americans have died from AIDS; and 59,725 Americans are currently living with AIDS.

EARLY INTERVENTION

Mr. President, for the first decade of the AIDS pandemic we have focused our Federal efforts on research into the causes and potential cures for this deadly, tragic disease. In the years ahead we must continue work toward a cure. But we are making significant advances in our ability to slow the onset of AIDS in HIV-positive individuals, and our Federal efforts must also emphasize access to early treatment.

Early treatment or intervention can help delay the onset of disease in persons who are infected with the AIDS virus [HIV] but have not yet developed symptoms. Drugs and treatments that are now available can help make AIDS a chronic but manageable disease. Without a vaccine, early intervention is the best and only hope to slow the progress of AIDS in individuals and to ease the catastrophic impact of the disease in our society.

As more drugs and treatments become available and more HIV-positive persons look to them to extend their lives, there will be health policy implications that we must carefully consider. The availability of drugs such as AZT that slow or arrest the progress of HIV disease will lead more people to be tested. The need for counseling and clinical monitoring will expand, inasmuch as drug interventions will be determined by the immune status of infected persons. The larger numbers of patients being treated will call for more medical staff—yet there is a growing shortage of people going into nursing and allied health professions. Many current physicians and health care workers are reluctant to treat HIV-infected persons.

The economic cost of early intervention is strongly influenced by the epidemiology of AIDS, inasmuch as 10 times as many persons are HIV infected than are diagnosed with AIDS. Basing its figures upon current treatment pricing, the Journal of the American Medical Association has estimated the annual pretreatment costs—testing and monitoring but not drug intervention—at about $854 per person per year. The JAMA estimates treatment costs—testing, monitoring, and drug intervention—at about $9,637 per person per year. There is no reliable estimate of how long individuals will remain in the asymptomatic stage. Drugs now comprise about 80 percent of treatment costs.

The policy dialog on early intervention is just beginning. Legislation has been introduced in my State of California to expand the early intervention demonstration projects that were established in 1988. The Centers for Disease Control is drafting guidelines for a national program to monitor the immune status of asymptomatic HIV-infected persons. Title II of the Federal AIDS CARE bill includes intervention programs as eligible for funding. The National Commission on AIDS is continuing to explore the issue and to make recommendations for action.

Through early intervention we may be able to extend the lives of large numbers of people who are affected with the AIDS virus. By prolonging the asymptomatic stage of illness we may also be able to have more persons still alive when more effective treatments become available. Early intervention offers the opportunity to begin rational planning for health care in the AIDS epidemic in place of the crisis-driven policymaking that has so far characterized our response.

[1] These individuals have privileges to be admitted without pass under a previous letter to the Sergeant at Arms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I rise this morning to introduce the budget reconciliation bill for fiscal year 1991. I do so with both confidence and hope, I say to my distinguished friend, Senator DOMENICI; confidence that the committees of this body have jointly crafted a budget plan that is balanced, one that is fair, and one that does the critical work of reducing this Nation's deficit. I offer this package with the hope that what has been a long wait for the American people and a period of uncertainty and strife for this body will finally be nearing an end.

In my judgment, Mr. President, the job before us could not be more plain. Deficit reduction simply must be accomplished, but we must also do it in a fair and equitable way. We must move decisively now to accomplish deficit reduction.

I think it is only fair to note in that context that the closed-door budget summit, in which I participated, took some 6 months to reach conclusion on the issues that we address today. And I must say, Mr. President, I sincerely hope that is the last budget summit negotiation in which I shall ever have to participate. It was hard, bone-crushing work, long, long hours.

The product had much to recommend it in the final conclusion but also the product had some severe flaws to which I think we will all agree. But the task that we undertook for 6 months in the budget summit has been picked up and completed by the congressional committees in both the House of Representatives and the Senate in the space of only 10 days.

The foundation and the framework that was done in the budget summit has been put to good use by the committees in both Houses, and I think the committees in both Houses of Congress are to be congratulated for the expeditious manner in which they have addressed themselves to the task of honest and meaningful deficit reduction.

This package, which was produced through established procedures of the Congress, has a far better chance of passage than the agreement that was passed behind closed doors by the small and somewhat isolated group that called itself the summit conferees. Virtually every Member of the Senate has had a hand in the creation of this package, and every Member of the Senate has a stake in seeing that this package becomes law.

If we act swiftly, if we act now and complete our work, we will send the clearest possible answer to those citizens who may be troubled that Congress cannot do its job and cannot do it on time. I think we will have drawn and completed in the space of 2 weeks the largest deficit reduction package in the history of this Nation—over $40 billion in honest deficit reduction in fiscal year 1991, 500 billion dollars' worth of honest deficit reduction over 5 years, the largest deficit reduction package in the history of this Republic.

Mr. President, 10 committees have now reported legislation that would produce more than $24 billion in budget savings for 1991 and $246 billion in savings over the 5-year period. Each and every committee of the Senate—and I am proud to report this, Mr. President—has moved very forcefully to get these savings.

This work has not been easy. On the contrary, it has been very difficult. Some of the choices they have had to make have been very painful, and some of the cuts that they have had to make have been very painful for them, and they will be painful for the American people. Some of the Senators have reported to me that this is the most difficult work they have ever had to do. One indicated that cutting some of these programs was almost like shooting his children as far as he was concerned. Farm price supports, for example, have been scaled back. And for those of us who come from agricultural States, that is, indeed, a bitter pill to swallow.

Bank insurance fees have been increased so that the banks themselves would pay a larger portion of any contingent liability that they might be exposed to rather than the taxpayer. Coast Guard user fees have been adopted—less subsidies for the Coast Guard in doing work that rightfully ought to be paid for. The Student Loan Program has been tightened up to cut out some of the waste and perhaps some of the abuse that has taken place. And Federal retiree benefits such as the lump sum option have been eliminated. We have attempted to address some of the problems of the growth in Medicare. Revenues of $142 billion have been proposed also, all in the name of deficit reduction.

There has not been a single committee that has not measured up to its responsibilities. Not a single committee, Mr. President, has not assumed its share of the burden and assumed it willingly. The fact is that the savings from each committee of the Senate either meet or exceed the instructions which we sent them.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, this bill actually surpasses and exceeds our deficit reduction goals or the reconciliation instructions by $4 billion in 1991 and $6 billion over 5 years, and I say to my friend, the distinguished ranking member, Senator DOMENICI, I think that is virtually unprecedented.

In terms of deficit reduction, the package contains more out-year savings than any reconciliation bill that has ever been enacted. Together, we have assembled a package that seeks to make up for the fiscal excesses and deficiencies, I would submit, of an entire decade.

I realize, Mr. President, that although committee members have all spoken on this package, it does not mean that we must forever hold our peace. There is likely to be a very spirited debate on the floor of this Chamber today, and I think that is healthy, a very spirited debate about tax equity and, quite frankly, I believe that is as it should be

I do not believe we should ask middle-income Americans, those who have been stretched and squeezed by the policies of the 1980's, to work overtime in the gristmill of deficit reduction. I think all of us would agree that middle-income Americans have done their fair share, and it is only fair that the 700,000 upper-income households that benefited most from the policies of the 1980's, who saw their tax rates cut in half and then income in many cases double, should contribute proportionately to help solve this Nation's deficit crisis.

I extend my congratulations to the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator BENTSEN of Texas, who, along with the joint leadership team of Senator PACKWOOD, the very able ranking member, Senator MITCHELL, the distinguished majority leader, and Senator ROBERT DOLE, the distinguished minority leader, have together and in a bipartisan way designed a revenue package that is equitable and one that I submit is sound.

Moreover, they have created a package that was built to pass this body. They have created a package that will rally the votes to be accepted. I submit that in terms of progressivity it is, indeed, a far better plan than the original summit proposal that the summiteers brought back to this body.

The burden of sacrifice is spread much more evenly than that of the budget summit proposal. The summit plan, for example, would have increased tax rates by 7.6 percent on the neediest Americans.

The proposal that we will have before us today rightly cuts the rates on the poorest citizens by 2.3 percent. What about the other end of the income scale, the wealthiest Americans? The summit proposal that we brought back to this body would have increased the contribution of the wealthiest Americans by only 1.7 percent. Under the plan that we are considering today these wealthiest Americans would see a 3.7-percent rise in their tax rates. Finally, this proposal will not suffocate middle-income Americans. It seeks only a 2-percent tax rate increase for middle Americans.

So in sum, Mr. President, this entire piece of legislation I think represents a genuine step forward, one that asks moderate sacrifice from all Americans in our drive to reduce this deficit and safeguard our economy. It exempts no one, no citizen from the duty of deficit reduction. On its merits I submit it is sound, sensible, and supportable.

I think, perhaps equally as important, the proposal that we present to our colleagues today accomplishes real genuine deficit reduction without fakery, without deception, and without shrinking from the stark reality of the fiscal problem that faces this country.

We all have an interest in demonstrating to the American people that we can do our job. I suggest that our interest is even more pressing than that. The forces that at the very moment are undermining the foundation of our economy leave us no choice but to act and to act now.

The perils of our indebtedness have been widely recognized. Confidence has been shaken in the soundness of the financial system of this country. Confidence has been shaken in our Government's ability to stand up to its responsibility. Foreign investors, those from whom we borrowed enormous sums of money over the past few years, are now looking elsewhere to invest their funds. Unless we get this Government out of the massive business of borrowing, interest rates will inevitably go up and economic stagnation will set in.

I do not have to remind anybody in this Chamber that we are now poised dangerously on the cusp of a recession, and we see ourselves at the very brink of war in the Middle East. The stock market has lost 20 percent of its value in just the past few months. The U.S. dollar in world markets is dropping to record lows. Sky-high oil has pushed up prices. And, once again, the tentacles of inflation are tightening themselves around our productive capacity.

For ills of that magnitude, I will have to confess that the budget agreement we are considering today is not a magic cure-all. But it is a very potent dose, I submit, of fiscal responsibility, a signal to one and all that this Government of the United States is serious about reducing its crippling deficit, serious about nursing its economy back to health. It is the kind of tangible agreement that the world financial markets have been waiting to embrace, a credible package upon which our own Federal Reserve, and Dr. Alan Greenspan, the able chairman, can now rely on and move to reduce interest rates.

Yes. There will be sacrifice. And I think it is high time that those of us in elective office started telling the American people the truth again. It has been the fashion over the past decade to say that we could have it all, that there would be no tomorrow, that we could mortgage the future of our childen, and we did not have to take any bad medicine ourselves.

That day is gone. Yes. We tell the American people that there will be some sacrifice in this package. But we tell them at the same time that it will be fair, that no American is going to be asked to make more sacrifice than another. We tell them that the wealthiest in our society are going to pay their fair share.

I say, Mr. President, that if we can implement this, if we can move this deficit reduction plan into place quickly before our economy deteriorates further, then we stand a good chance of receiving real benefits, a chance of receiving real substantial gains.

Lower interest rates, we all know, will put more money in the pocket of American working men and women. If interest rates fall by just one-half of 1 percent, and certainly that is a reasonable and logical expectation given the content of this legislation, then the average middle-class family could save $435 a year on their $100,000 adjustable rate mortgage. Compare this to the $297 cost of the Senate agreement to the typical middle-income family, and you can see that the vast majority of Americans clearly have something to gain from the passage of this deficit reduction package.

This is the message that we must take to the American people. It is the message that we must consider ourselves today. We must convince the American people of the benefits we will all derive from a balanced and sound economy. The benefits we will all derive from lower interest rates, and the benefits derived from this agreement, will persist and endure a long time after the time of sacrifice has passed and has been forgotten about.

Mr. President, after many months of adversarial dickering, after many months of back and forth, after many months of partisan accusations, it is now time for us to get down and do our job.

This deficit reduction package is the product of virtually every committee of the U.S. Senate. Virtually every Member of this Senate has participated in producing this product. I do not think anyone has been left out of the process. Everyone is an author and every citizen of every State can know that their elected representatives had a hand in producing this final result.

I must say the result is a commendable agreement that I think deserves the support of all of us, and I do believe it reflects credit on this institution.

If ever there was a time for action, I submit, Mr. President, it is now. For the better part of a decade we have had rhetoric about the crisis to come, and we have had rhetoric about the perilous problems we are creating for our children. We have talked about the uncertain future we are bequeathing to our country. Mr. President, this Senator has been on the floor a number of times in the past few years raising those problems.

But now the crisis is here that many of us have been predicting. The problems are ours and the future is the here and now. We have much to prove, Mr. President, to our fellow citizens in this country, many of whom have watched in dismay as our Government was stopped cold in its tracks.

I say to my colleagues that with the adoption of this budget reconciliation bill today, this budget reconciliation bill that will reduce the indebtedness of our children and our children's children by $500 billion over the next 5 years, we will have demonstrated not only to our countrymen, but to those who watch us with great interest from abroad, that we here in this Chamber, and we in this Government know how and can govern.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself as much time as I might require.

Mr. President, might I inquire of the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, the Senator from Tennessee, so that our fellow Senators might understand that our intentions are totally consistent, I hope, with the rules.

Mr. President, is it not the case that, for those fellow Senators from either side of the aisle who might want to make opening statements, the chairman and the ranking member are going to see to it that, in yielding time, we yield only for that purpose until sometime after 12 o'clock?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, that is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. That means, if I understand it, that any Senator who intends to offer any action on the floor by way of an amendment, to make a point of order, motions, that it is the intention of the chairman and the ranking member certainly not to preclude anyone. There will be plenty of time. They should know there are 20 hours. That goes into tomorrow. But we intend not to yield for that purpose until sometime after lunch.

Mr. SASSER. That is correct. We have been approached by a number of Members in prior days wishing to make opening statements, and we will consume the time up to noon in doing so. I might say to the distinguished ranking member that I hope we can make significant and speedy progress today, and perhaps it might not be necessary to use the full 20 hours of debate.

To those of our colleagues who might be listening to us in their offices, once we get past the opening statements, I hope we can move fast on any amendments that might be offered, and I hope that we can keep any amendments to an absolute minimum.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me say, so there will be no misunderstanding, this rule that we just established, this modus operandi, is not the creature of the chairman and the ranking member. We have been asked by and consulted with the leadership, who have asked us to do this.

I hope our fellow Senators will understand that we, too, want to get on with things. But there are a few problems we are trying to work out with reference to this measure that need our time. Some of us have to go off the floor and work on those items.

A number of Senators have asked me when amendment time is. We will follow the rules and be fair but, obviously, we control the time, and we would like opening statements until noon or thereabouts, without prejudice to either side.

Mr. President, let me say at this point, while this document before us is historic, and there is no question about that, it is with a great deal of sadness that the Senator from New Mexico comes to the floor with it, because, frankly, a number of us have worked very hard over a long period of time, and it was not intended that the process, started 4 or 5 months ago at the request of and behest of the President of the United States, would end up in the manner that it is now evolving. Clearly, we did not intend that it become partisan, as has occurred in the U.S. House.

This is not criticism on my part; it is just a truism. Since we went to the summit, bipartisan, bicameral, with both Houses, we had intended more of what is happening here on the floor of the Senate, because everyone should know that we do not know how many Republicans are going to vote for this package. Clearly, the Democrats do not know how many are going to vote for it on their side.

But it does not come to the floor of the Senate as a package of deficit reduction activities, reducing expenditures in a permanent and real way, and raising revenues. It does not come here as a Democratic or Republican initiative.

Maybe some of the specific initiatives within it might be somewhat partisan, but the package was produced by the joint bipartisan Democrat-Republican leadership, and the principal committees of activity, such as Finance, produced the bipartisan package that is before us.

Frankly, I believe the deficit of the United States is so serious that it is not a Democrat issue, a Republican issue, or the President's issue. The people of the United States want us to do something. As a matter of fact, they are almost to the point, in my opinion, where they are giving up on our ability to govern. I hate to say, but I think some of them think it is a joke.

Frankly, the way we have conducted ourselves over the past few months, maybe that is right; maybe their conclusion is right. Let me say to them, however, that we have a few days, fellow Americans and fellow New Mexicans—maybe 2, maybe 5—to redeem ourselves, because indeed, this particular deficit reduction package, if it goes through here, has Democrat and Republican support, and probably would get the President's support, and we would have an historic event occur.

Let me suggest that during the day, I say to my fellow Senators who are chairmen and ranking members, in particular, of the Finance Committee, that wrote the principal package—Chairman BENTSEN and Ranking Member PACKWOOD and other chairmen and ranking members—we already know there are going to be a number of amendments and proposals affecting their part of this bill.

Frankly, we will try our very best to notify the ranking members and chairmen, so they can come down and defend and argue their point, if Senators intend to change what they have put together. I hope they know that. We do not want to do that; we want them to do it. We will do it if they are not here, or are busy or occupied. We will try to get notice to them. That is point No. 1.

Point No. 2, this package contains some provisions which should not be in a budget reconciliation package. We are going to try our best to keep this a clean package, and we will confer with those committees and those Senators is due course about provisions that are extraneous and subject to what we call the "Byrd rule," which is a rule that says, essentially, matters that are really not deficit reduction can get taken out of here, and those who want them in have to get a super majority to keep them. That will occur in due course.

My third point is that a number of Senators have asked us where is the reform and enforcement part, the reform of the processes and the enforcement provisions. They are not in this, Mr. President, because there was no committee that could be instructed to do that.

So later in the day, hopefully, we will have completed with the leadership, the chairman and ranking member of the Budget Committee, and others who were interested in the summit reform activities, and we will hopefully have a major amendment to offer on the floor of the Senate. Certainly, we are hopeful that the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, is on board, and we are trying to see that the package is what he understands it to be.

So those who are worried about voting for this package, without some reform and assurance that the deficit will be reduced and we will not just spend the money, you will have an opportunity to vote on that reform before you have to vote on this package.

Obviously, I want to say here and now, if a whole new enforcement process building credibility into our activities is not adopted, count me out. There are a number of things in this package I would like to take out that are extraneous, but I support the substance of this package. It is bipartisan and it is fair.

I will try in my own simple way to dispose of the notion that we are not taxing the wealthy enough in this package for deficit reduction, because we are. In fact, as a general statement, the wealthy in the United States will pay more in new taxes under this proposal. Let me repeat it. The wealthy of the United States will pay more under this proposal than they do under the so-called Democrat package in the House. This bipartisan one imposes more taxes and, I think, in an orderly and reasonable way and somewhat more progressive upward than in the House package.

It does not have the removal of indexing of taxes for middle-income America. It does not permit bracket creep to start again. One of the most devastating aspects of the income tax for middle America was bracket creep with inflation. We did not adjust for inflation, and obviously we were collecting taxes we never expected because, with inflation, people's incomes were going up, but it was not meaningful, but the brackets never changed. We did that. The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] leaves that as his legacy, one of the most significant things we have done. The House did away with that for a year and changed the deductions for middle income a bit. We do not do that in this package.

Having said that, let me conclude that I hope we can keep this package basically intact and send it to the conference with a bipartisan attitude of getting something this weekend or early next week so that we do not close down Government in the United States because of our inability to get things done. I do not agree with those who think we ought to close down Government in order to push ourselves to do what we ought to do. I may be alone in that. I do not support it. It does not come as anything new to Members on my side. I do not see that as an approach. For one thing, the working people in Government are only a little tiny part of our expenditures. The expenditures of two-thirds of Government go on while we in a rather vindictive way furlough people who are supposed to be getting their paychecks.

Having said that, let me say that I will for now say nothing more about the progressive nature of this other than what I have just said in general terms. But as the debate ensues, I will talk about dollar numbers, how much more the higher income people will pay under this. I do not think it is punitive at all, but it is more than the House-passed bill for the higher income. I believe it is in a rather fair way. We have been told over and over that what we were talking about here on our side was not progressive. It is. They say that the wealthy did not pay their fair share, not more, but their fair share. That is wrong. It does.

Now, Mr. President, one last remark. When we speak of $40 billion in the first year, $500 billion over 5 years, assuming the new process reform, the enforcement mechanism, the new caps we are going to put on that are enforceable, the pay-as-you-go that we are going to insist on for entitlements, and all the other things that are going to be in the reform package, if all of this occurs, then people tend to ask, do we not have to pass something next year to carry it out? No. We have to keep the agreement which is enforced by caps and other measures and change the laws which are changed in this package so that expenditures that would have occurred automatically will not occur. And that is where you get the package.

A portion of it is discretionary and principally for defense. Defense is coming down. Some might say, is that real? I think for the next 3 years it is as real as anything we have done because, if we get the reform package in, we will have three caps in each of the next 3 years, defense, domestic, foreign. You do not mingle them and you do not exceed them. If you exceed them, it is cut back. That is how you get the discretionary savings. And even in the fourth and fifth there is a similar provision.

So, obviously, if I were writing my own budget, if I were writing a budget, I would not write this one, but nobody else would either. Everyone would have a different idea, a different plan, a different approach. And I am very comfortable with Senators coming to the floor saying how they would do it. But I just remind everyone, unless someone can convince 51 Senators that what they want to do is what we ought to do, then it is nothing more than somebody's idea, somebody's wish. Clearly we want collective decisions; that is why we have a Senate. If we wanted one-man decisions, we would not have a Congress.

So it is very difficult to come into consensus, and I hope we are close to that, and I hope after a day's debate, maybe long into the night tonight, we will do something right and historic and get on to conference with the House and perhaps end this agony, not only for us, but for our people. We ought to get it done.

Now, Mr. President, let me confer for one moment and I will yield.

Mr. President, I understand that Senator SYMMS, a member of the Budget Committee, desires to speak by way of opening remarks.

Mr. SYMMS. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time would the Senator like?

Mr. SYMMS. At least 25 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I might say, could I yield 25 minutes off our side to the distinguished Senator? He is going to manage for our side.

Mr. PRESSLER. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will. Let me do one thing.

Mr. PRESSLER. I have a brief point of order I would like to raise. It will not take more than 2 or 3 minutes. I would like to do that now if I could.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KOHL). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I believe that I have yielded myself 25 minutes off of the Republican side. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I would first like to say I know how hard the chairman and the ranking Republican worked to put this package together. If anyone doubts it, if anyone out in America is worried about this, this is the size of this legislation that was only put together yesterday—an 8-inch stack of legislation, that is now before us on the Senate floor. I have the utmost respect for both of my colleagues, and I worked very closely with Senator DOMENICI over the years on many issues and there is no Senator in this Chamber that I respect more. However, I have a different point of view on how this should be resolved. Mr. President, I am one of those Senators who has an idea on how the budget deficit ought to be fixed but probably do not have 51 votes to get it passed. That well may be the case, but I believe when the course of this week is over and the American people realize what is going on here in Washington, DC, my point of view may have a very good chance to prevail. Simply stated, my plan is to freeze the budget, and not spend any more money next year than we spent this year. If we do that, we have no need for all of these taxes that this package has in it.

Mr. President, I guess if I had one message for America it would be, "Grab your wallets and run for cover because Congress is getting up a head of steam to raise your taxes. They are going to tax your cigarettes, your alcohol, your gasoline and your insurance companies."

Yes, insurance companies. There is a tax in this bill that is going to decimate part of the insurance industry. It is a simple little thing called the DAC. What it does is force people to amortize the cost of selling insurance policies, to amortize them over 10 years instead of expensing these costs against current income. What it really is, Mr. President, is a phony bookkeeping process that takes the money away from the private sector and puts it into the hands of the Government so they can fund the welfare state, so they can fund the regulators, so they can fund the things of Government that somehow we have become to believe are so important.

Mr. President, in my opinion, when President Bush started out his campaign and said no new taxes, let's have a flexible freeze, he was right and that is still the right position for this country. This is still the best idea for our economy and that is a position that this Senator takes.

Sooner or later I think the Members of this Congress are going to catch up with the rest of the country to slow down this momentum for raising taxes. Part of this big package that I held up here, Mr. President, part of this huge package comes from the Finance Committee, which I am privileged to be a member. The Finance Committee, in my view, is one of the best committees in this Congress. Some of the best Senators serve on the Finance Committee. But I want to tell you what happened in the pressured atmosphere of the Finance Committee that instead of cutting spending, we were told to raise taxes to solve our fiscal problems.

The Finance Committee has added to this package a $142 billion tax increase; another $11.3 billion in additional taxes is disguised as spending cuts. Less than one quarter of the budget represents real savings or improved efficiencies in Government programs.

Yes, there will be some cuts in Government spending. It will be in the Defense Department. There will be cuts from the sinews of the Defense Department, when we have our young men and women in Saudi Arabia in harm's way right as we are speaking here. This does not make sense to this Senator.

In addition to this, under the original budget summit agreement, the various committees of Congress were directed to raise about $116 billion more in various user fees. These additional tax increases are hidden because they are scored as reductions. When user fees are combined with the Finance Committee's explicit tax increases it comes to a total tax increase of over $250 billion, maybe according to some estimates, up to $269 billion, one of the largest tax increases in our Nation's history.

It comes at a time when our economy is already struggling, battered by a credit crunch run up in the oil prices recently as the result of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. As a result, our economy is slipping into a recession. The recession may be over in a year, or it may last a lot longer. It may be a gentle slowdown in development or it may be a deep, precipitous collapse. We do not know how it will be, but the recession is clearly at hand.

There is no defensible economic theory which says that the correct policy in a recession is to raise taxes. You can talk to the Austrian school of economists and they will say do not raise taxes. In fact, the Austrian school economists normally will tell you, do not ever raise taxes. I happen to be in that school myself.

But you can talk to the supply-siders, and they will say do not raise taxes. You can talk to the Keynesians and they will say do not raise taxes at this time because we are going into a recession. The liberal, the conservative, the pragmatic middle-of-the-road iconoclast economists say the same thing: do not raise taxes going into a recession. Hold the line on Government spending.

In fact, Mr. President, yesterday I shared this information with my colleagues. I made the observation that I had come from my office, having had a meeting with the American Farm Bureau Federation, and their position has been all along that they want a flexible freeze of the budget and no new taxes.

The U.S. Civil Rights Commission came out with a statement yesterday.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights urges the President and Congress, in their efforts to reduce the federal deficit, to be fully cognizant of the importance of continued economic growth to the advancement of civil rights in this country. In bad economic times, black and Hispanic unemployment rates rise the fastest. In good times, a tight labor market encourages employers to cast a wider net when hiring, thus breaking barriers that have traditionally prevented minorities, women and persons with disabilities from gaining better paying jobs. Civil rights laws can do little to expand opportunities for members of historically disadvantaged groups when opportunities for all Americans shrink. Strong economic growth is important for creating a climate for effective civil rights policies.

Strong economic growth can also be a powerful force for cutting the federal deficit. A growing economy means more and better paying jobs, which expands the tax base. Policies that encourage savings and entrepreneurial initiative create a growth dividend which will reduce the deficit.

The Commission recognizes that deficit-spending can stifle economic growth, and encourage deficit-reduction efforts. However, plans for balancing the budget that would also reduce the incentives for individuals to work, save, and invest are likely to be self-defeating. This is the great danger in trying to control the deficit through new taxes.

We therefore call on the President and Congress to adopt only those deficit-reducing proposals consistent with economic growth.

Now get this, Mr. President. This is the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Specifically, we recommend freezing real total government expenditure at the fiscal year 1990 level.

The Commission recommends that the President and Congress focus on developing policies that will spur both general economic growth and, in particular, growth in the depressed urban and rural areas of our nation.

In fact, this is one I know my friends on the Democratic side of the aisle would love.

For those who live, work and invest in the depressed areas of our inner cities, for examples, we urge cutting the capital gains tax rate to zero, establishing enterprise zones, and other social and job-creating initiatives to help restore economic prosperity to these areas.

But what is this Congress preparing to do? Just the opposite. Even the Keynesian school, the economic thought that reigned during the days of Franklin Roosevelt, tells us to cut taxes, just the opposite of what this Congress is heading to do. Everyone is telling us to not raise taxes.

Our time is a parallel to what happened in 1932. A great man, Herbert Hoover, a fine person, following the collapse of the stock market and clear signs of recession decided the best policy to get the Nation's fiscal house in order was to raise taxes.

His decision was a tragic mistake. History, I think, has pretty well proven that it was a mistake to raise taxes during a recession. What could have been a slight recession, because the business cycle still thrived and could have pulled through, became a deep depression that could have probably been avoided.

The expectation at the time was that tax increases would reduce Government borrowing, relax the string on the credit market created by the policies of the Federal Reserve and thereby reduce interest rates. Congress, while spending months wrangling over the details of the tax increase, did not question the need for the increase, the prime factor that contributed to the Great Depression.

It sounds just like today, in every sense. As Hoover related to 1932, relate our present situation to President Bush in 1990—when the President agreed to put taxes on the table, the argument here has been who to tax, not whether or not to tax.

I am saying, Mr. President, in my opinion what we need is no new taxes, and a freeze on Government expenditures.

A lot of my colleagues are saying, "Oh, but if we do not pass this bill, we may have a sequester." The only place you are going to mind having a sequester is inside the Beltway. Most of the rest of the people in the country that live and work and pay their taxes would like to see the Government restrained, held back. Most pollsters show, if you check their attitudes they say, 75 percent of the American people think the budget problem should be restrained and fixed by a gentle holdback of the spending.

We do not have to fire all the people. It does not have to be Armageddon. It simply means we cannot allow the expansion of Government programs.

I think the idea that we need to raise taxes in a recession to cut our budget deficit and thereby lower interest rates has two fatal flaws. A tax increase, first off, is not needed to reduce the deficit. If we simply hold the line on last year's levels the deficit will fall by over $70 billion due to the natural growth in revenues. That is without any legislated tax increase, right now. If we want to cut the deficit by twice the amount proposed in the budget agreement we can do it without a single cut in spending. In other words, $76 billion is the estimate of savings if we just spent at last year's level. That would do more than the budget package.

The second flaw is the idea that cutting by $40 billion will lower interest rates. Reducing the deficit by a few tens of billions of dollars in the context of a $5 trillion economy and global economy many times that size simply does not cut it. It is like a few pebble waves out on the ocean. It is like throwing a little rock out on a pond. It makes a little blip but that is all.

The facade of a budget agreement with a loose fiscal policy of raising taxes and continuing the spending machine of the Federal Government will only allow the Federal Reserve to lower short-term interest rates. They cannot control long-term rates. Since long-term rates are dictated by long-term expectations, long-term rates will only increase once the public discovers the lie of deficit reduction by this package. That will make the yield curves further apart and make the dollar weaker.

This will put the United States in a policy of following the Brazilian and Argentine models. Those are two nations in South America that have massive resources; they should by all standards of the world be wealthy. The fact is in 1945 I believe Argentina had the highest per capita income of any nation on Earth. We would have thought they would all be wealthy people today but because their government policies in those countries have been so poorly managed, the government managed to see the people have a great deal of poverty despite great resources. That is what we should try to avoid here in the United States.

We have many assets in our favor but one of the things we should not think we can do is artificially drive down the short-term interest rates unless the markets believe the long-term rates are going to drop down. It puts the Fed in a very precarious position of trying to encourage foreign investment in this country, and I believe that will happen is it will work just the opposite of what most people in the Congress, who are well intended, expect to have happen.

The budget deficit, Mr. President, for those who espouse the interest rate argument, is expected to increase by about $130 billion from fiscal year 1990 to 1991. That means if interest rates are affected significantly by the budget they would be driven up by the budget agreement documents, not down. And if proponents of the interest rate theory really considered the argument in detail in the face of recession, I believe it would be irresponsible to accept a paltry $40 billion in deficit reduction.

I want to say it again. What the American people are crying out for is for us to hold the line on spending. Have a flexible freeze. Keep the airlines flying, keep the FAA working, keep the meat inspectors working, but go through all the other areas of the Government's budget and cut out the waste, reduce the spending, freeze the budgets.

Look at the legislative appropriations for the House and Senate, we do not have to look any further than that. We could very ably run the Congress on 10 percent less money than we have. I challenge anybody to refute that. There is not one Senate office or one committee staff or one House office or one House committee staff, or the whole apparatus of the operation of the Capitol, where we could not do things to save money. Slightly reduce travel. Reduce payrolls slightly. Maybe close an office here and there throughout the United States.

Look at the offices that we as Senators have around the country. Maybe we would each have to close an office here or there. But it would save enough money to make a real dent in the operation of the U.S. Senate and the House. And we ought to cut the White House budget also. Hopefully next time they have a summit agreement they will be more willing to look at other parts of the government and not take increased taxes for the only answer.

That brings me to another point I want to make here this morning. We find ourselves, in my view, in this predicament because Congress convinced the White House that the only way to deal with the budget was to convene a summit. In my opinion, Mr. President, the purpose of the summit was to hide the budget deliberations from the public eye, to allow proposals to be advanced and adopted without the public knowing whose fingerprints were on them. I do not condemn my colleagues who were part of the secret summit. I do not say I envy those people who had to be there. I am not sorry that I was not there.

I do not know whose idea it was, but I suggest the idea that under the shelter of anonymity people could put forth these so-called tough proposals probably came from someone who had not been elected to office. It probably came from someone who was appointed in the administration or something, who thought somehow we can go behind closed doors, we will come out with this perfect budget, we will get the Democrats and Republicans to sign off on it, then we will go down to the Congress and wham, bam it will pass.

That is not the way it works, Mr. President. This is a grassroots country. The people have a say. The problem is it was brought out to the Congress on a take-it-or-leave-it basis.

The President and majority leader went on television and did their best to encourage the American people to voice their support for the package. I can tell you what happened in my office. People expressed themselves but they did not express themselves in support for the package. Then the summit agreement, of course, went down to defeat.

During the process the package was presented to the American people on a take-it-or-leave-it basis and, guess what? They said leave it. We do not want the package. We do not want our gas taxes raised. Raising the gas taxes in the West, as the distinguished Senator from Montana pointed out in the Finance Committee at 2 in the morning last Friday night is devastating on Montana. It is devastating on Idaho. It is regional. It kills us in the West who have many, many miles to drive and, because of inclement weather, often have to drive less efficient four-wheel-drive vehicles to get to work. It is an absolute outrage this could be presented to Congress.

I will divert from my opening remarks, Mr. President, and say that at the appropriate time this Senator is going to offer an amendment. In fact, I have two amendments to this package. The first one is to strike the gas tax completely, the fuel tax. Strike it from this package because it is unfair, it hits the working people, it is unfair regionally to the West, it is unfair to rural America as opposed to urban America. It is a regional area tax that is not evenly or fairly distributed on the American people. This Senator wants to see a record vote on that. I do not believe the votes are here in the Senate, if a record vote comes, to keep a 10-cents-a-gallon gas tax in this package.

Second, if I am wrong and I lose that vote, I intend to offer a second amendment. I hope I do not have to offer it but if the first one passes I will not have to offer the second one. But if I fail on the first amendment I am going to offer an amendment that all the motor vehicle tax quotient of this bill goes into the highway trust fund.

If this package passes the way it is written, you can kiss good roads goodbye in America, Mr. President. This will be the demise of a good user-fee-supported highway system that we have worked so hard for the last 30 years to develop in the United States of America. It has taken a lot of work and a lot of effort by the people, all the way from Dwight David Eisenhower, Jennings Randolph, our former colleague here, and thousands of other Americans, to make it work to have a user-fee-supported highway system in America.

But if we start taking money to feed the bureaucratic welfare state out of the highway fuel taxes to have more big government, I can tell my colleagues what is going to happen. We will have more potholes. We ought to call this bill the potholes bill of 1990.

Mr. President, most of this bill was written behind closed doors. I think that my colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee will vouch for that. A lot of this was done by two or three leaders, who we all respect, of our Finance Committee. Then it was put before the Finance Committee behind closed doors. When we would try to bring up amendments they would say: "Cannot take amendments. We are all locked in."

Maybe I would do the same thing if I was chairman. I know my colleague from Montana was upset and expressed his frustrations. The Senator from South Dakota, who is on the floor, has also expressed his frustrations. The Senator from South Dakota is frustrated about the fact we worked for years to fairly treat the donor and donee States. That is what the freeway system is, a national highway system that treats everyone fairly.

Also, this bill tampers with the formula of distribution among the States. When I was chairman of the Highway Committee, Mr. President, during the early eighties, we put a minimum floor in so that every State got back at least 85 percent of what they put in the highway trust fund. That was a big compromise for States like South Dakota, Idaho, Utah, Wyoming, and Montana. It was a big compromise. We made big accommodations to try to make the program fair and recognize that we were coming to the completion of the interstate program.

But all of a sudden in the dark of the night, in the secret of summiteering, we find out that there is a formula in this bill which changes the pattern, changes the formula and raises the floor for the States.

Mr. PRESSLER. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I will yield only for a question, but not for any other parliamentary matters.

Mr. PRESSLER. I ask my friend if my amendment which I have spoken on the Senate floor about to strike that section would be beneficial to small States? Is it true that the amendment I have filed and have talked about on the floor would resolve that problem, to give the power to the Environment and Public Works Committee?

Mr. SYMMS. As the Senator understands it, yes, it would. In fact, it would be beneficial to about 30 States in the Union. I think the Senator's amendment would not only be fair to the 30 States in the Union, that is, the small States, like South Dakota, with a small declining population, long road miles, but it would also, I think, be fair to the rest of the country in terms of the fact that the Environment and Public Works Committee has worked on this formula question throughout the period of years since the inception of the Federal Highway Program during the years of the Eisenhower administration. We have constantly modernized it, updated it, and tried to make it fit the needs of the Nation. For us to do this in secret summiteering I think sets a very bad precedent. It weakens, I think, the opportunity for the representation of the American people to have a sound, fair highway system.

Mr. President, I think my time has expired. I yield myself 5 more minutes to complete my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The Senator has that right.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I want to say that the rallying cry of the tax-and-spend crowd now has become tax the rich. Certainly, many people, though certainly not all, agree with the ability to pay proposition; that is, that the wealthy people should pay a higher total tax than the middle-income people. I would like to give some figures.

If there has ever been a fraud perpetrated—and I have to compliment the majority leader and Speaker of the House, both of whom I have high respect for, for the job they have done to sell this proposition to the American people that somehow the rich do not pay any taxes.

Mr. President, under the current tax system, the top 1 percent of the taxpayers earn 13.4 percent of all income and pay 24.8 percent of the Federal income tax. The top 5 percent are 28 percent of the total income and pay 44 percent of the income. The top half of all taxpayers earn 86 percent of all income and pay 94 percent of the tax.

I call my colleagues' attention to the article in today's Washington Times newspaper, by Warren Brookes, "Stomping the Rich." I ask unanimous consent that at the end of my remarks this be printed in the RECORD, with the combined table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, what this points out is that the trends of the 1986 Tax Reform Act are that the wealthy people in this country are paying more taxes than they have ever paid before. These are IRS figures just recently released on 1987–88 tax returns, that show in a summary now that the distribution of total income tax burden for those with incomes over $100,000, those people are paying, 36.4 percent of all taxes. During the 1980's period of growth, these people's share grew 76 percent of where they used to be pre-Ronald Reagan: Those over $50,000 are now paying 62.9 percent of all the taxes. Under $50,000 pays 37 percent.

The point is, Mr. President, that our tax system does already tax—it is like the old question when they asked Willie Sutton why he robbed the bank. He said that is where the money is. The same thing is true with the tax collector. This package has all kinds of excise taxes that are going to hit across-the-board, rich and poor alike and, in my view, is unnecessary at this point in time.

In summarizing my remarks, I say, again, to the American people, now is the time to grab your wallet, run for cover, get the ballot box out and start comparing how the people in Congress vote and how these bills come out on your tax increases and start watching because, in my opinion, we are playing Russian roulette with the American economy to be doing anything other than controlling spending. In fact, this budget's saving will not be savings at all. Why? Because the President's man, Jim Brady just asked this week for an additional $50 billion to bail out saving and loans. This $50 billion will more than wipe out the $40 billion in 1991 savings put forward by this budget package before us.

No, Mr. President, this budget will not lead to a balanced budget as it proposes to do. Moreover, every economist in the country, every business leader in the country will tell you the problem is spending, spending, spending. Somehow it turns out it is easier to divert the argument from spending to whom are we going to tax. Then the strategy becomes, tax someone and try to make it look like, "Oh, I didn't want to do that but I have to vote for this bill because we just cannot get by without it."

Cannot get by without what? Cannot get by without $1,150 trillion? We have $1,150 trillion in the Treasury now, or close to that. The revenue flow to the Treasury has been growing every year. We have so far $1,100 billion in revenue and people are saying that is not buying us enough government.

Look out America. Congress is getting up a head of steam to raise taxes and neither facts nor reality seem able to slow it down. What will certainly slow down further if the Congress continues down this path is: our economy.

The Finance Committee has contributed to this headlong tax increase, $11.3 billion in additional taxes disguised as spending cuts, and $5.3 billion in additional, new spending. Combined with the other elements in the budget, less than one-quarter of the budget represents real savings or improved efficiencies in Government programs.

In addition, under the original budget summit agreement the various committees of Congress were directed to raise about $116.2 billion in various user fees. These additional tax increases are cleverly hidden because they are scored as spending reductions.

When combined with the user fee increases, the Finance Committee's explicit and disguised tax increases bring the total tax increase to $269.6 billion, one of the largest tax increases in our Nation's history. And it comes at a time when our economy is already struggling. Battered by a credit crunch and the recent runup in oil prices as a result of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, the economy is slipping into a recession. The recession may be over in a year, or it may last much longer. The recession may be a gentle slowdown in growth, or a precipitous collapse like the recession in the early 1980's. But a recession is clearly at hand.

There is no defensible economic theory which says the correct policy in a recession is to raise taxes. Not from the left, not from the right, not from the past, nor from the present. Not one.

The monetarist, supply side, and neoclassical schools all tell us the correct response to a recession is to cut spending to free up resources for more productive uses and to cut taxes to reduce the straitjacket Government imposes on investment, work, and growth.

Even the now discredited Keynesian school tells us to increase spending and to cut taxes, exactly the opposite of what the Finance Committee is reporting out.

The one prescription each of these schools agree on is that the correct policy in a recession is to cut taxes, not to raise them.

So, what ghost of a theory is propelling these Halloween tax increases through the Finance Committee and the rest of Congress? The evidence points to the Depression economics of Herbert Hoover. In 1932, following the collapse of the stock market and in the clear signs of recession, Herbert Hoover decided the best policy was to get the Nation's fiscal house in order by raising taxes. Mr. Hoover, a fine man, was tragically mistaken, as events quickly proved.

The expectation at the time was that the tax increase would relax the strain on the credit markets created by the policies of the Federal Reserve and thereby reduce interest rates. Congress, while spending months wrangling over the details of the tax increase, did not question the need for such an increase. While many factors contributed to the Great Depression, no one questions that the Hoover tax increase made a bad situation worse. Yet here we are getting ready to repeat the tragic mistake of 1932.

Today's argument—and that may be too strong a word—for increasing taxes traces its intellectual heritage directly to the Hoover tax increase. The full statement of this argument runs as follows: Raising taxes in a recession is necessary to cut the budget deficit and thereby lower interest rates.

There are two fatal flaws with this theory. First, a tax increase is not needed to reduce the budget deficit. If we simply hold this year's spending at last year's levels, the deficit would fall by about $76 billion. That is, even without a tax increase we could cut the deficit by nearly twice the amount proposed in the budget summit agreement, and we could do so without a single cut in spending.

The second flaw is the idea that cutting the budget deficit by $40 billion will lower interest rates. The effect on interest rates of reducing the deficit by a few tens of billions of dollars in the context of a $5 trillion economy, and a global economy many times that size, is like a pebble's waves on the ocean surface.

Proponents of the interest rate argument are not even consistent. Even with a deficit reduction package of $40 billion, the budget deficit is expected to increase by about $130 billion from fiscal year 1990 to fiscal year 1991. This means that if interest rates are affected significantly by the budget deficit, they would be driven upward by the budget agreement targets, not downward. If proponents of the interest rate theory really considered their argument in detail, in the face of a recession it would be irresponsible of them to accept a paltry $40 billion deficit reduction package.

We find ourselves in this predicament because the Congress convinced the White House that the only way to deal with the budget was to convene a summit. The sole purpose of the summit was to hide the budget deliberations from the public eye and to allow proposals to be advanced and adopted without the public knowing whose fingerprints were on them. The secret summiteers did not have the courage of their convictions to defend their ideas in public debate, so they sought the shelter of anonymity.

The agreement was presented to the Congress on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The President and the Senate majority leader went on television to encourage the American people to voice their support for the package. The American people expressed themselves, all right. Well over 90 percent of the calls we received were in strong opposition to the budget agreement. Our experience seems to have been typical, and so, despite the exceptional efforts of the secret summiteers, the agreement went down to defeat in the House of Representatives. It was a take-it-or-leave-it deal, and the American people shouted: Leave it.

The package put together in the Finance Committee has been accurately described as the budget summit agreement with softened edges. In fact, the leadership of the Finance Committee took the budget summit agreement as its starting point and then began a committee minisummit.

The committee leadership has met numerous times, all behind closed doors. Members caucused numerous times, all behind closed doors. The package was then presented to the whole committee for discussion and informal markup, again behind closed doors, and with a clear leadership understanding that Members' amendments would be opposed—the fix was in.

These informal discussions are not necessarily or always bad. But there comes a point where public hearings, and public discussion and debate are essential to safeguard the democratic process. When the entire legislative process is done out of public view, it not only conflicts with our national values and traditions, but it breeds the kinds of legislative disasters for which the Congress is rightly scolded. The reconciliation tax bill the committee has reported out may turn out to be one of the best examples of a late-night, closed-doors disaster that we have seen.

The rallying cry of the tax-and-spend crowd has become: "Tax the Rich." Many people, though certainly not all, agree with the ability-to-pay proposition; that is, that the wealthy should pay a higher total tax relative to their income than should middle-income taxpayers and that middle-income taxpayers should pay more than lower income taxpayers. But it is fair to wonder if enough is not already enough.

As the table below describes, when measured by income levels, under our current tax system the top 1 percent of taxpayers earn 13.4 percent of all income and pay 24.8 percent of the Federal income tax. The top 5 percent of all taxpayers earn 28 percent of the total income and pay 44.8 percent of the tax. The top half of all taxpayers earn 86.4 percent of all income and pay 94.6 percent of the tax. A tax system in which the top half of all taxpayers already pay almost 95 percent of the tax while the bottom half pays about 5 percent is not merely progressive, it is punitive.

1 percent	13.4	24.8
5 percent	28.0	44.8
50 percent	86.4	94.6

While the package the Finance Committee is reporting out isn't as extreme as other proposals floating around the Capitol, it clearly achieves the tax-the-rich goal. For example, the package includes a provision that reduces by 5 percent of their adjusted gross income the itemized deductions that may be taken by individuals with incomes over $100,000.

The effect of this provision, much like the effect of the so-called bubble, which results from phasing out personal exemptions and the 15-percent tax rate for upper income individuals, is to increase the effective top tax rate by about 1.67 percentage points. The effective top income tax rate, therefore, has been raised from 33 percent to almost 35 percent. Ironically, after all the opposition from the White House over the bubble and preserving the existing tax rate structure, the Finance Committee has managed to slip in a higher tax rate.

The charities are strongly opposed to this proposal, and for good reason. For, although the 5-percent limit is low enough so as not to affect most individuals' decisions as to whether and how much to give, it is not hard to read the writing on the wall. Over time, the 5-percent rate will be raised, first to 8 percent, then to 10 percent, then to 50 percent, and so forth. And while the rate increases, the threshold will fall to $90,000, then to $75,000, and so on. And with each change, more and more Americans will become discouraged by the tax treatment of charitable giving.

The rich are also the primary target of the tax on luxury items. There is no policy reason to support this new tax. It is just a convenient means to hit up higher income individuals for another $2.1 billion. These are not so much luxury taxes as envy taxes; it is the codification of covetousness.

The Finance Committee has given upper middle income taxpayers a higher tax rate as well. Currently, both employers and employees pay a 1.45-percent hospital insurance [HI] tax on gross wages to fund Medicare, along with a 6.2-percent tax to fund Social Security. In each case, only the first $51,300 of wage income is subject to tax under current law.

Under the Finance Committee proposal, the wage cap for the HI tax is raised to $89,000. Since the employee pays all of his tax, and much or all of the employer's share of the tax, this proposal is equivalent to raising the income tax rate of a very large number of taxpayers from 28 percent to almost 31 percent, and another tax rate increase is slipped in through the back door to raise $19 billion.

The rich aren't the only ones offered the opportunity to pay for Congress' inability to restrain spending. For example, even though the price at the pump for a gallon of gas has increased over 27 cents since the Iraqi invasion, the Finance Committee has decided to raise an additional $42.6 billion by more than doubling the gas tax.

The gas tax was originally levied under a compact with the American people that the funds raised would be placed into the highway trust fund to be spent on transportation infrastructure such as highways, bridges, tunnels, and mass transit. The Hooverites on the Finance Committee have broken this compact because only half of the money raised by the gas tax increase goes into the trust fund. The other half goes to deficit reduction.

Having broken faith with taxpayers, the committee may be criticized as well for counting the taxes that are deposited into the trust fund as deficit reduction. Clearly, taxes raised to be spent will eventually be spent, and so it is disingenuous to count the increased inflow into the trust fund as deficit reduction.

The biggest tax increase on businesses falls on the life insurance industry. Whatever the technical merits of the proposal, the effect of this $8 billion revenue grab is nearly to double the industry's taxes overnight.

According to the Finance Committee, the rich would seem to be anyone who works for a living, drives a car, has a small business, drinks wine or smokes cigarettes, buys life insurance or works for a life insurance company, or has a telephone.

Some Senators intone gravely that we may be playing Russian roulette with the economy if we don't get our budget deficit under control by raising taxes. The reality, however, is that this package is the economic version of the Dark Ages medical practice of bleeding the patient to effect a cure. Applying the tax leeches to the American economy may well worsen the biggest budget buster of all—recession. And next year we could be facing a budget dilemma that makes this year's deliberations look like a cakewalk.

EXHIBIT 1

STOMPING THE RICH

(By Warren Brookes)

In the last few months, Americans have been treated to the greatest orgy of rich-bashing since Vladimir Lenin led the revolutionaries onto the barricades in 1917.

Broadcast talk shows now reveal most Americans think the rich in this country pay very little taxes, and are paying less every year, at the expense of the poor and middle class.

This incredibly false notion is being fed with gusto by the Democrats in Congress and their friends in the media, like Sam Donaldson, who was massively offended last Sunday because the new Senate tax proposal "only" adds $29 billion to the tax burden of those over $100,000.

But then Mr. Donaldson has never been one much troubled by facts, and apparently the public is in no mood for rational discourse in this already deeply poisoned debate. For anyone interested in the truth, the reality could not be further separated from the rhetoric.

If you doubt this, we ask you to consider the 1987 and 1988 income tax return data recently released by the Internal Revenue Service. Not only do the data show the massive concentration of the income tax burden on the top taxpayers, but they demonstrate conclusively that virtually all the growth in income tax revenues is now coming from the top 13 percent of the taxpayers, and nearly 77 percent of it is coming from those over $100,000. (See Table).

In 1988, total income tax collections rose by $47 billion over 1987, from $369 billion to $416 billion, a 12.7 percent rise—reflecting the strong, pre-Bush economy. Yet in that 1988 year, the taxes paid by the income groups under $50,000 (representing 87.3 percent of the taxpayers) rose by only $1.9 billion, or only 4 percent of the total increase.

Furthermore, that 87.3 percent of all taxpayers paid only 37.1 percent of the total income taxes collected, and in real terms their tax payments have actually been going down every year. And 1988 was no exception: The real tax payments (after inflation) for the bottom 87 percent of all taxpayers fell by another 2 percent, on top of a 10 percent real drop in 1981–87.

This means that 96 percent of the entire 1987–1988 increase was paid by the top 13 percent of the taxpayers, who accounted for nearly 63 percent of all income taxes paid. Their tax payments rose 21 percent in 1988, or a real rise of 17 percent. It is hard to imagine a more steeply progressive tax burden than that, or a more steeply progressive trend.

The bellyaching coming from average taxpayers over the alleged "tax breaks" for the rich represents an appalling level of ignorance from a class of taxpayers who have seen their income taxes go down massively (nearly 15 percent) in real terms over the last nine years, even as the taxes paid by the wealthy have in fact soared at their fastest growth in at least three decades. From 1981–88, the taxes paid by the top 5 percent rose in real terms by more than 70 percent while GNP grew less than 24 percent.

Indeed, in 1988 the 2.3 percent of all taxpayers over the income level of $100,000, paid 77 percent of all of the additional taxes collected in 1988 (over 1987), even though this 2.3 percent's total share of the tax burden is already a massive 36.4 percent. Their actual tax payments rose 27 percent real.

In plain English, the 1986 Tax Reform Act made an already intensely "progressive" income tax burden still more progressive, with new taxes collected from the rich at double even their already high share of the current income tax burden.

Indeed, the highest target of the Democrats' revenge, the 65,303 taxpayers with more than $1 million in income, who represent only 6/100 of 1 percent (0.06 percent) of all the taxpayers, not only paid 10.5 percent of all the taxes paid ($44 billion) but paid 41.3 percent of the total revenue increase in 1988!

This means that the Democrats and their allies like Kevin Phillips are engaged in the most astonishing and destructive, not to mention irresponsible, level of distortion on this issue, and the result could be catastrophic for economic policy.

That is because simply slapping huge new 5 percent to 15 percent tax surcharges on everyone with an income of more than $100,000 (as House Democrats now propose) will not only be massively unfair in terms of who has actually been paying the rising tax burden in this country, but economically suicidal.

The vast preponderance of U.S. new job formation is the result of investment by those with incomes of more than $100,000, and whacking those incomes is attacking job creation and economic growth.

It is time to stop disgusting and ugly politics of envy and remember where Lenin led his people—right down the economic toilet.

Mr. PRESSLER. Parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SYMMS. I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. PRESSLER. Parliamentary inquiry; parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield the floor for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SASSER. I yield only for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I have a point of order which I would like to raise at this time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the remarks made here this morning by the distinguished Senator from Idaho, a valuable member of the Senate Budget Committee. I must say that I cannot agree entirely with a number of the assertions which have been made this morning by my distinguished friend.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho raised the point—and I think a valid point—that this is perhaps not the most opportune time for us to be raising revenues given the state of the economy. This economy, according to most of the indicators, is either teetering on the brink of a recession or is, indeed, in a recession at the present time. So why should we be looking at a deficit reduction package today that would reduce the deficit by over $40 billion in fiscal year 1991 and by almost $500 billion over the next 5 years?

We do so, Mr. President, because we are forced to do so. We have absolutely no alternative. We are seeing a virtual explosion in the Federal indebtedness and in the deficit that this Government is now carrying.

Some of us approached leading representatives of the new administration as they came into office right after President Bush's inauguration and made the case to them that we needed to embark on a program of significant deficit reduction, and it needed to be done then—and now—when the economy was doing well, when the economy was expanding.

We were rebuffed in those overtures and told that it was not time to take the measures that needed to be taken—perhaps at a later date but not yet.

Some of us retorted that if we continue to wait we are going to see this business cycle, which is already very mature, begin to curve downward; we will see the deficits get up even further; that will not be the opportune time to come with a significant deficit reduction package.

Again we were rebuffed, and the effect at substantial deficit reduction was put off once again, even though these same officials realized that something was going to have to be done about the deficit.

How did we get into the present posture?

The proximate cause of the explosion in indebtedness that we have seen over the past decade is the result of two things: One, the supply side tax cut of 1981. According to the statistics of the Office of Management and Budget—and bear in mind, Mr. President, at the time, this was President Ronald Reagan's Office of Management and Budget—as a result of that tax cut of 1981, the so-called supply side tax cut, the Federal Government lost $1.414 trillion during the decade of the 1980's, an unprecedented hemorrhage of Federal revenue.

In essence, the revenue base of the U.S. Government was reduced by 20 percent over the period of the 1980's. Superimposed on top of that was the largest military buildup in the peacetime history of this country; indeed, a military buildup that even surpassed the buildup during the course of the Vietnam war.

As we were reducing taxes and depriving the Government of a revenue base to the tune of $1.414 trillion during the decade of the 1980's, we were increasing military spending in nominal dollars at about 50 percent.

Mr. President, that is what confronts this Congress, and that is the reason we are in the posture now of having to move in the direction of serious deficit reduction. That is the reason leading officials of the Bush administration knew when they took office that something was going to have to be done about this deficit, because we were literally mortgaging the future of this country to satisfy the need to meet the Federal debt payments.

We found over the past few months that there has been a virtual explosion in the deficit. It comes about as a result of two things: First, the economy is now starting to curve downward, just as some cautioned the administration it would do; second, there is an almost unprecedented need for Federal borrowing to deal with the disaster that has occurred in the savings and loan administration.

So that is where we find ourselves now as we hang on the edge of a recession having to move in the direction of significant deficit reduction.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho was quite correct in his assertion that this is not good for an economy which is coursing downward, but I would submit that because of the failure of the administration to act—we simply have no alternative but to do so.

Why do we have no alternative? Because we now find that the Federal deficit which the President told the American people in his State of the Union message in January was $101 billion and would be reduced to $64 billion by fiscal year 1991, and then it would go away, by the President's own statement of a few days ago in his White House address to the American people the deficit has mushroomed to over $300 billion. So we have no alternative but to try to deal with it now.

We are in a catch-22 situation. Why? Because we are financing a substantial portion of this deficit with funds that are borrowed from abroad, principally Japanese funds. We find now that as the American dollar continues to decline, as our economy continues to decline, as troubles start to appear in the banking structure and in the underlying insurance structure of our economy, foreign investors are looking elsewhere to invest their funds. They find that interest rates in Japan and interest rates in Germany and even the financial security offered by those two countries might be at least on a par or even preferable to that of the United States. So we see the option of financing our excesses from abroad starting to dry up on us. We are left with no alternative but to fall back on our own resources to try to finance this deficit.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho said why do anything; let us just go on with the sequester. He cited polls in which the American people said we want to see Government shrunk.

He said the American people would not care if we had a sequester. I submit that the American people might very well change their minds when they determine that the airplanes are not running on time, or in some places running hardly at all.

There might be second thoughts when there are air collisions because of not enough air traffic controllers, and people perish as a result of that. There might be second thoughts when we go back to the days before meat inspections were in the factories and in the meat packing plants, back to the days written about the muckrakers at the turn of the century, when people were eating meat from disabled cattle; spoiled meat. If we did not have the Government funds to keep the meat inspectors there, then we would see that people were really starting to care.

What about lack of Government employees to get out the Social Security checks or the Medicare checks? Certainly, I think we would see the people beginning to care then. I suspect we would begin to see a lot of citizens beginning to care if they saw the military establishment in this country reduced by sequester by as much as 30 percent, while we have almost 200,000 troops now deployed in the Middle East.

So sequester is not a rational alternative for us at the present time. If we went to sequester, it would mean a sequester of well over $120 billion across the whole spectrum of the Federal Government.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho addressed himself to reducing Government spending. He said that he found that to be a more platable alternative than the package we have before us. But I noted not one word was said about reducing defense spending.

I submit to my colleagues that when you spend a dollar to buy a B-2 bomber, that dollar is just as valid as the dollar you spend for child nutrition programs. And the dollar you spend to build a nuclear aircraft carrier depletes the Federal Treasury just as much as the dollar you spend for defense. And the dollar you spend to buy 155-millimeter howitzers depletes the Federal Treasury just as much as the dollar you spend for Medicare for our older people. But not a word was said about reducing defense spending in this budget package.

I thought, Mr. President, it was sad irony yesterday when the word came that the President of the Soviet Union was receiving the Nobel Peace Prize, and a majority of this U.S. Senate voted to expend tens of billions of dollars of taxpayers' money to buy more B-2 bombers. Who in the world are we going to bomb with those things?

My distinguished friend also indicated that the Members of Congress asked for a summit; that we wanted to get the administration in a summit so there could be anonymity as to what the results of that summit agreement were.

Well, the facts are that the President of the United States requested the summit. The facts are that this Senator said: I do not want to go to a summit. The facts are that the Senate majority leader, Senator MITCHELL, indicated he would go to a summit only with great reluctance.

But when the President of the United States summons the leadership of this Congress to the White House to discuss the economic mess that this country is in, to discuss the fiscal crisis that threatens the very health of this economy, what do we do? Of course, you go to the White House to discuss those matters with the President, and if he wishes an economic summit, that is precisely what the responsibility of the leadership to accede to the President's request is. That is what was done.

But I submit that it was not the Congress or the leaders of the Congress who wanted the anonymity of a summit. No.

I strongly suspect it was leading figures in the administration, perhaps even the Chief Executive himself, who wanted the anonymity of the summit so that when the summit came out with a budget summit agreement that had revenues in it—which every sensible economist in this country knew had to occur and every serious student of Government affairs knew had to be a principal part of any summit agreement—I suspect that there were officials in the administration, and perhaps even the President, that wanted to say this is something that had some kind of an immaculate conception: "We had nothing to do with it."

It was the administration that wanted the anonymity of a summit agreement to do what they knew had to be done. Well, to the credit of the leadership of this Congress; to the credit of the distinguished majority leader, Senator MITCHELL; to the credit of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Mr. FOLEY, they let it be known in no uncertain terms that they were willing to do their duty, but they wanted to have a sharing of the responsibility.

That is when the President finally, at long last, sort of slipped a piece of paper out from under the door to the waiting press, and said, "Oh, by the way; we are going to need some increases in revenue in this budget package."

Following that statement, then we saw the Chief of Staff rush over here to Capitol Hill to assure Members of the other party in the House of Representatives: Well, no, that probably was not the case at all. As if to say, "We did not want to do it, but the leadership, the Democratic leadership in the Congress, made us do it."

Mr. President, some statements were made about the tax policy: What sort of revenue policies we ought to have; who ought to be paying them. Just let me remind my colleagues of a few statistics.

According to the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, during the decade of the 1980's, the tax rate on the poorest tenth of our population increased by 28 percent, while the tax rate on the richest 5 percent was cut by 9½ percent. And when some of our colleagues in the House of Representatives try to call attention to that, they are accused of what? Class warfare.

I call my colleagues' attention to the fact that the bottom 30 percent in the economic brackets of this country were hit by double-digit tax-rate increases during the 1980's. Tax rates were increased on the bottom 60 percent of our population, and they were lowered on the top 40 percent.

The real disposable income of the poorest 10 percent of this population dropped by 8.4 percent during the 1980's, while the richest 5 percent experienced a skyrocketing 45-percent growth in real disposable income.

What we are saying in this package, what we are saying in a bipartisan way—and I want to say to the credit of the distinguished minority leader, Senator DOLE, who has been a leader in a lot of areas, and who is a man, I think, of proven courage, not only on the floor of this Senate, but in other fields of endeavor, also, the leadership of this Senate, working in conjunction with the Finance Committee, its distinguished chairman and ranking minority member—I think they have produced a fair and progressive revenue package. Is it the one that I would have produced? No. I would like to have one that is more progressive. I would like to have one that raises the top bracket. I would like to have one with no gasoline tax at all. I would like to have one with no reduction in benefits to Medicare beneficiaries at all. But they have done the best they could in a bipartisan way, and I think it is a fine product. In the final analysis, Mr. President, I am going to support it.

The time has passed for us to come to this floor to try to convince the American people that the problems facing this Government can simply be solved by doing away with the waste, fraud, and abuse. I have served in this body for 14 years, and I have not seen one line item in any budget dedicated to waste, fraud, and abuse, and I have looked hard for it. I cannot find anybody that is allocating funds to waste, fraud, and abuse in this budget or in any other. Sure, there are some excesses. There are excesses in any large human endeavor. And that is precisely what government is—perhaps the largest of all human endeavors. There are some places we can cut; there are some places we can save, and we have to continue to look for them. But to say that, by cutting here and saving a tiny bit there and cutting out a little duplication here, we would solve a problem that now amounts to over $3 trillion, simply, I think, Mr. President, to put it kindly, begs a question.

So although I think the Senator from Idaho has done the Senate a service in bringing some of these matters to our attention here this morning, I say that, on balance, I would have to agree with him on the substance to a substantial degree. What we have before us, I think, is a budget reconciliation bill that every Senator can proudly support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Delaware, from the time under the control of Senator DOMENICI, for the sole purpose of an opening statement, and that I be recognized immediately at the close of that statement, without any intervening action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PRESSLER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to speak on this for 5 minutes. I do not intend to offer an amendment or a point of order at this time. I have an amendment and a point of order to offer at the proper time, but I want to be able to speak for 5 minutes. I ask unanimous consent to do that at this moment.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am not controlling the time on the other side. I do have a unanimous-consent request pending with regard to the Senator from Delaware and, perhaps, by the time he has finished, Senator DOMENICI will have returned, and he can deal with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object. I am inquiring if there would be an appropriate time that I could make a 5- or 6-minute statement, too, sometime this morning before the committee moves on to taking action on this reconciliation bill?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, we have reserved the time up to 12 o'clock for opening statements.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee is pending. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do not want to delay this. We are going to have to have more time than this 12 o'clock arbitrary time, it is quite obvious. And I am confident that the distinguished managers of the bill want to hear the opening statements of the Senators. We are going to have to go beyond 12 o'clock, and we want to know when our turns come, and on that basis I will not object; but I will be objecting until we can work something out and get some idea. I will wait my turn, but I would like to have a turn in making an opening statement.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I say to my distinguished friend from South Carolina that we have 20 hours on the bill, as he knows, and I think we have probably used up about 1½ hours, so there will be ample time. What we are trying to do now, we reserved up to 12 o'clock for opening statements, and then Senators may make statements thereafter. The leadership has requested that there be no amendments offered until 12 o'clock. We are not precluding opening statements going on after 12 o'clock.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Just remember that some of us are around and have been waiting.

Mr. SASSER. I say, Mr. President, that we will put my friend on the list, and I ask the Chair to do so, also.

Mr. PRYOR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. I reserve the right to object, and I shall not object. I want progress to continue. I want to be remembered by my distinguished friend from Tennessee as one of those standing seeking recognition, and shortly, during the course of the noon-hour period, perhaps I could be recognized for approximately 10 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas will be remembered for recognition and for other well and good reasons.

Mr. PRESSLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President. What is the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SASSER. The unanimous-consent request is that I be allowed to yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Delaware from the time under the control of the distinguished Republican manager, Senator DOMENICI—and now Senator SYMMS is on the floor—for the sole purpose of an opening statement; that I be recognized immediately at the close of that statement, without any intervening action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object. I am wondering if the manager of the bill would bend his consent to include the Senator from Montana for 5 minutes immediately following the 10 minutes allocated to the minority side.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I would be pleased to do that.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield 5 minutes to me following that?

Mr. SASSER. I would be pleased to. I might add that the time of the Senator from South Dakota would be charged to the time of Senator DOMENICI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. PRYOR. Reserving the right to object, so I can properly get in the line here, Mr. President. Immediately following that I request, since the Senator from Tennessee cannot yield time on that side, that I follow the distinguished Senator from Montana after his statement.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, could the acting Republican manager yield that time? I have been waiting all morning trying to get in a 5-minute speech. I am not going to offer any amendments or points of order during that time. I have been shut out here for some reason.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, in all fairness, I think we are operating on the basis of alternating back and forth. Senator SYMMS is representing Senator DOMENICI here, and what I suggest is that, following the opening statement of the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Montana be recognized for an opening statement only, then the Senator from South Dakota be recognized only for an opening statement, then the Senator from Arkansas be recognized only for an opening statement. I do not want to leave the Senator from South Carolina out.

Mr. HOLLINGS. But you have.

Mr. SASSER. If no other Senator from the other side appears, we would go to the Senator from South Carolina, with the provision, Mr. President, that they be recognized only for opening statements and not for the purpose of calling up an amendment or making a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair, under the previous order, recognizes the Senator from Delaware for 10 minutes for an opening statement.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for his courtesy.

Mr. President, I have long opposed tax increases and promoted policies for economic growth, and I remain steadfast in my commitment today. Unfortunately, as the most recent edition of the prestigious British journal, the Economist, reported, in the budget process now under way, "Exasperation is the father of desperate solutions," and when Congress gets its tax increases, "The deficit will rise."

This is the truth, and as Frank Lloyd Wright was fond of saying, "The truth is more important than the facts." Both parties can bicker over the facts and try to hide deficit and tax increases in a smoke-and-mirror presentation to the American taxpayers. But in the end, the taxpayers know that unless we initiate real reform in our budgeting, rates will go up, Government spending will continue out of control, and the deficit will continue to rise. But how difficult will it be to realize real reform? Yesterday, the Democrats in Congress did not even allow the Republican "no-tax alternative" to come to the House floor for a vote. How can these Members of Congress begin to believe the public is not aware of the tax-and-spend game when they will not even allow the process of Government to protect the taxpayer?

Frankly, the folks back home are aware. They are well aware. They remember that Congress enacted tax increases in 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, and 1987, all with the excuse of bringing down the deficit. And they remember the result: Today the deficit is larger than ever before.

Some would try to lay the deficit at the foot of the Reagan tax cuts, which sparked the longest peacetime economic expansion in the history of America. To those who oppose this tax cut I would only say, why do not you offer an amendment on the floor to revoke those tax increases? I have seen no one willing to do that. But, in any event, the folks know better. They know, as the Economist reported, it is "right to blame the deficits on higher spending rather than on lower taxes." This is the Economist reporting, and let me repeat, as the Economist said, "It is right to blame the deficits on higher spending rather than on lower taxes. Americans paid the same proportion—19 percent—of their GNP in Federal taxes in 1988-89 as they had done 20 years earlier, but Federal spending rose from 19.8 percent of GNP to 22.2 percent."

Again, that is the truth, and the taxpayers know it. They do not for a minute think they are undertaxed; they think the Government overspends, and it is here—on this side of the equation—where we are going to find long-term solutions to the deficit problem. Congress must responsibly cut spending. This is the only way the deficit can be brought under control. This is the only way it can be brought under control without plunging our economy into a recession.

To move forward with the Democratic budget proposals advancing on Capitol Hill—either of which would represent one of the largest tax increases in history—is no way to strengthen our teetering economy. Instead, we need policies that promote growth. We need incentives for the folks back home to save, to build families and homes, to invest, educate and prepare for retirement. We need capital formation for research and development, and to encourage risk taking and modernization of farms and factories. This is how we will compete throughout the nineties and into the 21st century. We cannot tax America into prosperity. It has not worked in the past; it will not work now.

The taxpayers know this, just like they know all this talk about tax fairness is euphemistic for tax increases that ultimately will affect everyone. I do not need to remind my colleagues that only 4 years ago, the 1986 reforms were hailed as the great equalizer between income classes—the great bill to restore fairness. Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI, the House Ways and Means chairman, stood in that body's chamber 4 years ago and said the 1986 Tax Reform Act was "the broadest tax bill ever written * * * (that) it reaches deep into our national sense of justice * * * (that) it is the great equalizer between income classes * * * (that it was) structured in such a way as to leave the new income tax system more progressive in every income range."

Today, 4 years later, we are hearing virtually the same thing with these new proposals. What I want to know is: did the old bill not work, or has Congress just come back to draw more blood? I do not need to remind my colleagues that even the so-called bubble was enthusiastically supported by Democrats—not to benefit the wealthiest taxpayers, but to actually increase progressivity of the Tax Code.

Tax increases in the eighties raised hundreds of billions for the U.S. Treasury. What these people in Congress are saying today is that despite the dramatic increase in revenues due to the Reagan recovery—and despite these additional increases—Congress cannot make do with the money it has—literally twice the revenue it had in 1980, before the economic recovery sparked by Roth-Kemp.

Frankly, it is absurd to think the folks back home are believing this spoiled logic—that Congress cannot make do, and that these tax proposals are only going to hit the rich. They know that the taxes proposed by both the House Democrats and the Senate Finance Committee will end up squarely on the backs of the middle class. They know that as the deficit continues to climb they—the middle class—will be hit even harder. What is worse, Congress knows it too. The people drafting these bills are well aware that even if they took all the earnings of people making $200,000 a year and more, they would be able to run Government for only 20 days or so. Consequently, tax increases have to hit the middle class. They always have; they always will.

Even right now the House Democratic plan delays indexing and hits the middle class family with a tax increase of $300 a year, and this is just one bad provision that does not include taxes on cigarettes, alcohol, and others. On top of this, only 5 percent of our taxpayers are individuals or joint filers earning $70,000 a year or more. All the money of these 5 percent will not be able to satisfy Congress' insatiable appetite. Eventually the taxes on the middle class are bound to increase.

Real reform must come on the spending side of the equation. It must come through increased Government efficiency, by cutting waste, fraud, and abuse. The GAO reports that through effective management and efficiency, we could save $180 billion. One hundred and eighty billion dollars is not chickenfeed. And real reform must come through enforcement procedures that puts real bite into the budget process. Gramm-Rudman has turned out to be a fraud perpetuated on the American people to allow Congress to talk one game and vote another—a fraud that has allowed the biggest budget deficit ever. Real reform must also have provisions for emergency tax cuts to stimulate the economy, just as the current budget summit proposal has provisions for emergency spending.

The way out of the problem is clear, Mr. President: we hold the line on spending and promote growth incentives to strengthen the economy, and then let it help pull us out of the red. Under current law, Federal revenues are projected to increase an average of $64 billion annually, adding $320 billion to the revenue base by fiscal 1995. This should be enough to deal with the budget deficit, especially if the amount of spending growth is kept well within the annual growth of revenues—which should not be too difficult for a responsible Congress. This approach to the deficit would be good for family, good for business, good for the economy and even good for a Government that would have to concentrate on cutting waste, fraud and abuse and getting other spending under control.

It does not take great ingenuity to raise taxes or cut services. What takes ingenuity and commitment is improving productivity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time allocated to the Senator has expired.

Under the previous order the Senator from Montana is now recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, late last Friday night, about 12:30 in the morning, the Senate Finance Committee reported out its Finance Committee reconciliation package. Included in that package is a provision which changes the minimum allocation provision in the highway formula from 85 to 95 percent.

Such a provision is not within the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee. Also, it has no consequence in reducing budget deficit; it has no revenue effect. In short, it is completely extraneous to the reconciliation bill.

Consequently, late Friday night, Mr. President, I as a member of the Finance Committee, expressed this as one of my reasons for opposing the Finance Committee bill; I feel strongly this matter should be taken up, if at all, next year in the next Congress when reauthorization of the Federal-Aid Highway Program comes before the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee.

On Monday of this week, I also expressed here on the Senate floor, my opposition to the formula change.

Mr. President, earlier this morning, at about 9:30 this morning, I came over to the floor to also rise to speak for the purpose of making a point of order against the reconciliation bill; the minimum allocation change is extraneous to the budget bill and, therefore, should fall under the Byrd rule. I was told by the leadership that the leadership would prefer no amendments to be brought up before noon today and no points of order made before noon today. Consequently, I left the floor so I could come back at a later time and make my point of order.

Mr. President, I will make the point of order at a later time today. There are two ways to remove this heinous provision from the reconciliation bill. One would be a motion to strike. That takes 51 votes, takes a majority of the Members of the Senate to prevail. The other alternative to make a point of order is that the provision is extraneous under the Byrd rule. That is the action I will take a short time from now. And if the Presiding Officer agrees and rules that the matter is extraneous and falls under the Byrd rule, it then falls from the bill unless someone then moves to appeal the ruling of the Chair. Such a motion requires 60 votes.

This will be an opportunity for Senators to determine what road they wish to go down. Do Senators on this reconciliation bill wish to go down the road of adding in matters that are extraneous to budget deficit reduction, or do Senators wish to go down the road of respecting the integrity and authority of the authorizing committees?

I hope that Senators on this point of order, and particularly on a motion to waive, if such a motion is made, agree that we, on this budget reconciliation bill, will not consider an extraneous matter.

If we go down the road, either by allowing this minimum allocation provision to remain in the bill, or allow other provisions to be in this bill that are brought up on the floor here today, I strongly submit that we will be doing a disservice to the Senate, to the country, we will become entangled and we will have a budget reconciliation bill which will include matters that have nothing to do with budget deficit reduction. Frankly, I think this would do a disservice to the American people.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I have very little time remaining, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. REID. I just want to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will withhold, the Chair advises the Senator from Montana that under the unanimous consent propounded by the Senator from Tennessee, there were no time limits for other Senators to speak.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement, might I yield to the Senator from Nevada for the purpose of asking a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can yield for that purpose.

Mr. REID. I say to the Senator, it is true that he laid out very well as a matter of fact why this reconciliation bill should not have extraneous matters on it. It is also true, is it not, that, just from a sheer point of equity and fairness, this should be upheld as a point of order; for that basis if nothing else, just on basis of equity, that is some 27 States are being treated unfairly? Is that not true?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the Senator is absolutely correct. There will be 27 States who will lose if this provision is enacted into law. That is very unfair to 27 States who have not had the opportunity to debate the allocation formula in the due course of the highway funding bill which will come up on the next Congress.

The proper time to determine the fair allocation of the distribution of highway funds will be next year when the highway authorization bill comes up. It is unfair to States who lose, and 27 States will lose, for us in a reconciliation bill, without any opportunity to debate the matter in full committee that has jurisdiction, to have to have this issue forced upon us.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. REID. It is true, is it not, in the State of Montana, for example—I was there recently; I did not drive the highways—but it is true, is it not, flying over the highways, that in the State of Montana you have a very sparse population with thousands and thousands of miles of roadways that that sparsely populated State must maintain for people traveling through Montana? Is that not true?

Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator is absolutely correct. In fact, the State of Montana has the second-highest State overall fuel tax of the Nation. It is 20 cents a gallon for all motor fuels. So not only Montanans but people from California, from New Jersey, from Texas, from Florida, can go to Glacier National Park and Yellowstone National Park and drive on our highways. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. REID. Does the Senator know which State has the highest gasoline tax?

Mr. BAUCUS. Because the Senator from Nevada asked the question, I have a pretty good idea what State that is.

Mr. REID. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank the Senator from Nevada for his questions and for his contributions to this debate.

Mr. President, I will be very brief. I know other Senators may want to speak. Let me just reiterate the basic points.

The minimum allocation formula change that is in this reconciliation bill should not be in the bill. At a later time this afternoon I will make the point of order that that matter should fall, it is extraneous under the Byrd rule. It is extraneous because it has nothing to do with deficit reduction. It is extraneous because it is not within the jurisdiction of the Environment and Public Works Committee and has nothing to do with the reason why we are here today—that is, deficit reduction.

It is also unfair. It is unfair to 27 States who will have dramatically reduced highway funding allocations. The proper time to deal with this matter, Mr. President, is next year when the highway authorization expires and when the Congress and the appropriate committees in due course take up highway funding and highway authorization. That is when this should be taken up.

Mr. President, I will not at this moment list all the States which lose under the formula, but in my full statement I will include those States who will lose dollars under the proposed formula change. I very much hope Senators who will lose under this formula will support my point of order which will be made at a later time against this provision of the bill.

Mr. President, while this reconciliation package contains a number of controversial items, there is one particular provision I object to on both policy and procedural grounds. This item is both budget extraneous and clearly outside the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, the committee reporting it—no hearings were held, no vote was taken.

This provision, section 7405(j), entitled "Apportionments With Respect to Increased Revenues" has nothing to do with reducing the deficit. It raises no additional revenues. And it has no effect on overall Federal spending.

Rather, this represents an abrupt attempt to bring about a controversial and significant change in the way Federal highway funds are distributed to the States.

More specifically, this provision would increase the minimum allocation—the minimum payback 19 States are currently entitled to receive from their payments into the Highway Trust Fund—from 85 to 95 percent.

Such a change is inconsistent with the concept of a national highway program—a program established to bring all Americans together.

My home State of Montana is large and sparsely populated. Yet we are also resource rich. Our land and people help meet a large part of this Nation's needs for such vital commodities as: coal, wheat, barley, beef, timber, oil and gas, and hard rock minerals.

With deregulation of the rail industry, we depend now more than ever upon our highways to get these products to market.

And, at the State level, we are taxing ourselves to death to maintain these roads. While some relatively rich States like Florida and Georgia, for example, have managed to keep their gas taxes below 10 cents, Montana's 20-cent-per-gallon tax on all motor fuels ranks as one of the highest in the Nation.

Despite these efforts at the State level, make no mistake about it, Montana is struggling to maintain its existing highway system.

Yet, before serious consideration of next year's highway bill has even begun, we are being asked to make a concession to more populous, more urban, and more economically diverse States. Mr. President, that's just plain unfair.

But it's not just States like Montana that lose under this proposal. This is one area where States as diverse as Montana, New York, Alaska, and Rhode Island have a lot in common.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, increasing the minimum allocation to 95 percent would result in a shift of over $3 billion away from the so-called donee States over the life of this budget agreement.

Under preliminary tables provided to the Environment and Public Works Committee, Federal Highways estimates the following 27 States will end up losing under this proposed change: Alabama, Alaska, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these preliminary tables be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BAUCUS. In summary, Mr. President, there are three excellent reasons to remove this provision from the bill:

First, the proposed change in the minimum allocation is budget extraneous;

Second, it falls outside the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, and is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Environment and Public Works Committee; and,

Third, it marks an abrupt change in Federal policy that should be addressed, if at all, next year when the Environment and Public Works Committee takes up reauthorization of the Federal Highway Program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FORD). Under the previous order, the Senator from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Montana. His point of order is identical to the point of order I tried to offer this morning. I join in his effort.

The organization of this body being what it is, I am sure that point of order would have to come from the majority party side. I recognize that. I tried to make the identical point of order this morning but was prevented under parliamentary rules. But let me discuss the substance of the issue from my State's perspective.

We are very concerned about the highway trust fund formula. I spoke on the floor last night and over the last few days. I had an amendment to correct this as well as a point of order. But we all should work together, in spite of the election year situation we are in. And I certainly join in that effort.

The small States are potentially treated very badly in the highway formula. The large States want to do the formula by population.

Some say, well, is that fair? The small States have much greater distances. They have a great deal of difficulty raising the money for adequate highways. This is one of the problems in our Federal Republic.

I have a copy of "The Federalist Papers" which discusses the quality of representation in the Senate, the conflict our forefathers foresaw between the large States and the small States, and the decision to allow the House of Representatives to have the number of their Representatives based on population, and the decision to have two Senators for every State in the other House of Congress. The Federalist Papers say:

> A government founded on principles more consonant to the wishes of the larger States is not likely to be obtained from the smaller States.

So we had a compromise—the Great Compromise.

Here, today, 200 years later, this is exactly what we are talking about. It is a fight between the small States and the more populous large States, the big city States which dominate in the House of Representatives. So when the highway bill goes through the House it comes through with a very strong bias toward using population as the formula to allocate highway funds.

When it comes to the Senate, the coalition of Western Senators, two per State, joined together the last time, and I was very active providing some leadership in that area. We joined together to work to change the formula so the number of miles of roads is also used as a factor in the formula.

Some people say this means the people of Texas pay $1 and they get 85 cents back. There is an 85 percent rule. Whereas some people in smaller States pay more than a dollar but get more than a dollar back. That is true in some instances.

But, we can also say in the current S&L crisis that my State of South Dakota has not contributed anything to the cost of the S&L crisis but my citizens are paying—indeed, we contributed a great deal.

The point is: There are different situations where moneys are allocated or distributed in different ways. I do not always agree with them. I do not agree with the S&L one. But here on the highway trust fund formula we have the Senate Finance Committee this week acting in an area where the Environment and Public Works Committee is supposed to act.

Last night, I gave a speech on this floor talking about my amendment, talking about the efforts I was going to make today. Those efforts will procedurally be made by somebody on the other side of the aisle. I do not object to that because if we get the job done, that is the important thing.

The point is the highway bill will be up next year for a reauthorization. That will be a 5-year bill, a 5-year effort. That formula will be decided in the Environment and Public Works Committee where it is supposed to be decided, and on the Senate floor. What the Finance Committee has done this week is to have changed the payout from the highway trust fund. They have changed that formula. It would be in this reconciliation package going through here. We would not really have a chance to vote on it. That is the reason I prepared the Byrd rule point of order which I tried to offer this morning—which I presented to the Parliamentarians last night and earlier this morning, but which will be offered by somebody on the other side of the aisle later today.

I also prepared amendments which I announced and filed and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD over the last week anticipating this. Parliamentary rules and partisan preferences will not allow me to offer that, but I join in any such effort as a cosponsor. I support it and we will get the job done. Whoever gets the credit, it does not matter.

In conclusion, I think this dispute over the allocation of highway funds and the fact the Finance Committee has attempted to put this into the reconciliation package is an illustration of what our forefathers foresaw in "The Federalist Papers." It is the duty of Senators from small States to band together to fight this sort of thing to protect our people. That is what they foresaw.

Also, it is fair because we have greater miles of roads. We have weather conditions that are severe. We need a national interstate highway system. We also need to work on the infrastructure of our country. We need to rebuild bridges and roads. I think in the 1990's, the crisis of our country will be an infrastructure crisis, keeping our bridges and roads in good shape and repairing them.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the amendment and the two points of order I prepared be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BYRD RULE POINT OF ORDER

Mr. President, pursuant to section 20001 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, I raise a point of order that subsection 7405(j) is an extraneous provision.

This provision violates subparagraph (d)(1)(C) of that statute because it is not in the jurisdiction of the Committee with jurisdiction over the provision.

BYRD RULE POINT OF ORDER

Mr. President, pursuant to section 20001 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, I raise a point of order that subsection 7405(j) is an extraneous provision.

This provision violates subparagraph (d)(1)(A) of that statute because it does not produce a change in outlays or revenues.

AMENDMENT

Beginning on page 353, line 15 of subpart B of part I of subtitle D of title VII, strike all through page 354, line 3.

LANGUAGE WHICH WOULD BE DELETED BY THE PRESSLER AMENDMENT

(j) APPORTIONMENTS WITH RESPECT TO INCREASED REVENUES.—Section 9503(c)(1) (relating to the expenditures from the highway trust fund with respect to the federal-aid highway program) is amended by adding at the end the following new flush sentence:

"No expenditures shall be made under this paragraph with respect to receipts (including interest) of such Fund attributable to any rate increase provided under the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990 unless rules similar to the rules under section 157(a)(3)(A) of title 23, United States Code (as in effect on the date of the enactment of such Act), are applied to such expenditures by substituting '95 percent' for '85 percent'.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I will not have the opportunity to offer these. Recognition was not allowed for me, but rather reserved for someone on the other side of the aisle. I note with some humor and simply for the record that the original order of recognition was changed to reverse the order of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR] and the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] so that I would follow my friend from Montana in the speaking order. Also, I have been on the floor all morning seeking recognition. And when I began a parliamentary inquiry my recognition was terminated before the inquiry was made, much less finished. Perhaps that is my fault. I need to talk faster.

Mr. President, let me assure my colleagues I do not raise these points in anger. I simply want the record to be clear on my part. I accept that my party is in the minority. That does not preclude us from initiating proposals, which can later become reality when offerings by Members of the majority party. My main concern is that it gets done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for an opening statement only.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I think this legislation we are having on the budget and also the process has been one of some degree of length. There is no question about that, Mr. President. It has also been illuminating and, if there is any silver lining whatsoever in this fiasco we have created, it is that maybe the public has now become somewhat more educated on the process that we labor under and try to work within in order to establish a budget for the United States of America.

Mr. President, I apologize to my colleagues this morning. I have not found time to read this document. Also, in fact, if I found time to read this document, the budget reconciliation measure before the Senate, I do not think I would take that time. I daresay no Member of the Senate is going to read these several hundred or several thousand pages of minutiae and budget detail.

However, Mr. President, on our desks this morning, and sent to our respective offices throughout Capitol Hill area, was a summary of what this budget document represents. This summary is here. I hold it in hand, Mr. President. I respectfully invite the attention of my colleagues to page 13 of this particular document. This is the summary. Which I will have printed in the RECORD. I think it should be a part of this debate.

What we have before us in this, several thousand page reconciliation bill, is a very, very small revenue raiser that raises $1.1 billion over the next 5 years. This proposal comes, I think, if my information is correct, from the Labor and Human Resources Committee in attempting to meet under our budget process the goal that they were required to meet and furnish as a part of their effort in helping to reduce the deficit. The $1.1 billion is raised by increasing five times the maximum civil penalties that can be imposed by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, OSHA, for violations of worker safety and health standards.

That sounds pretty good. But what, in effect, happens out here in the real workplace is every inspector, every regulator employed by OSHA, has a different method of deciding what the rules and the regulations are. What we are about to do, if we do not strike this section out of the reconciliation bill, is create an army of bounty hunters within OSHA to go out and find enough violations so they can satisfy the budget numbers in the reconciliation bill of $1.1 billion over the next 5 years.

I am a member of the Finance Committee. I voted for the Finance Committee package at 1:30 a.m. on Saturday. But I dare say, Mr. President, of all the members of the Finance Committee helping to bring this monumental blueprint for a budget to the floor of the Senate, no one, I think, had any idea that this section was in here.

Mr. President, just imagine this. The distinguished occupant of the Chair from the State of Kentucky has a number—thousands I assume—of small businesses, just like this Senator from Arkansas. Just imagine a situation in a shoe store on a corner in Paducah, KY, or Lexington, or Little Rock, or Magnolia, or wherever, a person who owns that store, or a person who, under the incorporated charter of that store happens to be a member of the board of directors, or a person who is labeled as the manager or the president, of this store. This individual is going to open up the doors of that shoe store, after we pass this bill, and is going to find himself liable overnight for five times the fine that is presently imposed under present law.

Second, if a person—and this is where I found this section so egregious, Mr. President—if a person consents to be on the board of directors of that shoe store, or any company in America, criminal liability for a violation in the workplace is extended to that member of the board of directors.

Mr. President, this has never been done before in the history of this country. We are about to impose one additional hardship on not only every major business, but definitely, and more specifically on every small business person who is going to be faced with an OSHA inspector who is a bounty hunter now, who is charged with raising additional deficit reduction dollars to comply with the budget resolution.

Mr. President, I received a letter from NFIB, and let me quote it:

In the past, small business owners viewed OSHA as the enemy. However, over the last several years, due to positive changes in poorly-drafted and executed regulations and improved philosophy at OSHA, cooperative efforts between OSHA and business owners, business owners have now been able to work productively with OSHA to improve working conditions for employees.

The letter goes on to state, Mr. President, that if criminal sanctions are going to be charged against not only the president, the manager, the owner, but now extended to those individuals who are on the respective boards of directors, that this is going to create a situation that will be intolerable for American business.

Mr. President, I am going to classify this section in this particular bill as a mistake. I hope it is a mistake. I am also going to respectfully suggest that those Senators who feel that this should be a part of reconciliation, part of reducing the deficit, by extending criminal sanctions, by increasing fines fivefold on business owners, that they come to the floor and explain why this provision happens to be in a deficit reduction package that this Senator from Arkansas wants to support. I want to support it. I want to see this process move forward.

Mr. President, I hope that our colleagues who are basically the fathers of this legislation, this particular section in the reconciliation bill, will come at the proper time to see if we cannot extract this from the budget reconciliation because what we are doing is imposing one additional hardship that may break the back of many businesses in this great country of ours.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, since no Republican is seeking recognition, the distinguished Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, let me thank the managers of the bill and thank my distinguished colleague from Arkansas. We can see the bedevilment that besets us when we operate in this particular 11th-hour fashion.

With regard to the Senator from Arkansas' remarks, I would note that men convinced against their will are of the same opinion still. I can remember a dozen year ago when these same Senators complained about certain severe OSHA requirements. OSHA excesses more or less disposed of the former distinguished Senator from Wyoming, Senator McGee, because our colleague here, the present Senator, Senator WALLOP, depicted on TV how the OSHA crowd was going to require Wyoming ranchers to ride the range with portable toilets. The ad depicted a roundup, complete with Marlboro men, but instead of the cigarettes, you had a toilet bowl and tank wrapped around the poor horse's neck. As the animal went wobbling down the range, about to go head over heels, the announcer said: "That is the way Washington thinks we ought to round up cattle here in Wyoming. Vote Wallop." So do not wallop me with that OSHA nonsense again.

I want to join the Senator from Arkansas in opposing that provision. I do not see how it got out of the committee, but it has, and these things do happen.

Now, Mr. President, by way of opening remarks on this bill, let me note that we have heard this morning from our distinguished colleague from Delaware, the daddy rabbit of growth, the growth of deficits and debt, that is. That is the only thing that has grown in any meaningful terms. Deficits and debt, and debt and deficits, and deficits and debt.

We are told that when you find yourself in a hole, you should stop digging, but we have never seen, as the Senator said, a Republican who did not like a shovel. They continue digging furiously today. Here, after 10 years of wrecking the economy, they want to take another swig of that old deficit barleycorn and preach the old-time religion of growth, growth, growth.

For heaven's sakes, do not give us any more of this growth. It is killing us. It has been a nagging cancer all summer long, this so-called capital gains issue. For a year and a half, now, we have heard how that $5 billion measure is going to single handedly jumpstart the economy. We have witnessed grown men walking around hollering how we are going to jump-start a $5 trillion economy with a capital gains provision that, of course, over the 5 years, loses us $21 billion. What nonsense.

"We are going to have growth, growth." Do not ever tell us southern politicans about growth. We learned long ago how to carpetbag the North. The first requirement is that you pay your bills. You are not going up to New York, to Boston, to Chicago to visit captains of American industry, and try to lure them with visions of moonlight and magnolias. You're not going to lure them with promises like: "We are going to pave your road." No way, Jose. That's a lot of hooey.

You have to offer them productivity. You have to pay your bills. And back in the 1950's, we led the way. We raised taxes in South Carolina. And it was not easy. I had to sell the idea.

That is why I fought the President of the United States, because we have seen this problem of not paying the bills. I have been to the mountain top and seen the other side. You have to work, and work against friends, and work against politics because nobody likes taxes.

All these polls say the people are against taxes. Who is surprised? Heavens above, polls do not ever ask, "Do you want the Federal Government to pay its bills?" I think 95 percent would say "yes" to that, but polls do not ask that question. They just ask: "Are you for taxes?"

So you have to straighten yourself out in the first instance, raise taxes and pay the bills. Therein, incidentally, was the idea behind Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. It was, immodestly, my initiative growing out of my experience in South Carolina. Wall Street said, "Governor, we have heard that before, that you have a balanced budget. But how can we count on it?"

I said I have an iron-clad device to control it. Our law requires the auditor to periodically certify to the Governor, that the expenditures were within the reference. And if not, zoom, right across, sequestration and it works. Governor Reilly did that; Governor Campbell has done it. The sequester is usually 2 percent. It is a minimal kind of cut, but everybody knows that the discipline is there.

And, incidentally, we did not contemplate under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cutting $110 billion in a single year. Indeed, 1991, this year, was supposed to give us a balanced budget when we adopted Gramm-Rudman-Hollings back in 1985.

And we did not anticipate robbing the Social Security Trust Fund. There was no need. We planned a balanced budget by 1991. So there is nothing wrong with the budget law.

The failure of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is simply that we have not told the truth. Of course, it would be blasphemous to try to compare Gramm-Rudman-Hollings with the Ten Commandments. Nonetheless, we do not obey the Ten Commandments, but nobody says abolish them. We do not obey Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, but everybody says let us get rid of it. But they do not want to have to vote explicitly to kill it.

The Senator from Delaware says we need growth. Of course we do. We need growth. We need a freeze. We need spending cuts. We need taxes. We need all of the above. Our situation is desperate.

I have outlined the nature of the crisis throughout the summer. When we came back after Labor Day, I wrote a Washington Post article, and more recently one in the New York Times, describing our predicament.

As I have said we need a mini-Marshall plan for East Europe and Latin America and a maxi-Marshall plan here in the United States, because we have moved into the trade war where competitiveness is the name of the game. There is no sense of that in this Congress or in this town. There is no understanding of the problem from the President of the United States. Instead, he flies around the country trying to blame Congress. The debate is distracted by questions of who is rich and who is poor; and which tax is progressive and which is regressive. But we are not talking about America stepping up to the challenge of competition internationally.

So we need growth, yes, and the best growth measure is to stop the growth of interest costs. We are now into a vortex where interest costs are eating the Federal budget alive.

For the first time in the history of the United States, we are witnessing an international crisis in which the dollar is going down rather than up. The Europeans and Japanese do not think the United States of America is a safe haven for their money, and so the dollar goes down. In previous crises, the dollar always went up.

So the best way to achieve growth and straighten this mess out is to pay the bills. It is annoying, dismaying to me to have Senators come on this floor and start talking about growth, and how they are against taxes, because the pollster says that is what Senators have to parrot: Reelect me.

You will not find in the history of man the solution to a problem of this magnitude in a political pool. At the founding of the country, Ben Franklin said, "Let's put this proceeding in Philadelphia off the record if we are going to get a Constitutional Convention," because if you took a public pool back 200-some years ago, people were against the king, against strong government.

They were for the Articles of Confederation and against the Constitution. Everybody knew it. But the wisdom of the forefathers said, "Close the door, and let us not have any political pools, because we will never get a free people started."

We also hear fine preachments against waste, fraud, and abuse, and for cutting spending. Let us be clear right now that the President is agreeing to $162 billion deficit for this year, right now, 1991. Add Bill Seidman's S&L bailout which they are off the floor trying to maneuver to get off budget. It could total $100 billion. They cannot find a rug big enough to sweep that one under. You can get wall-to-wall carpeting, but it is not going to hide the S&L bailout.

I know the President does not want to hear about his son, Neil, anymore. We do not want to hear about the S&L Senators anymore. But there it is, another $100 billion in 1991.

So if you add 162 billion and 100 billion, you have 262 billion. And then add the trust funds that they are still trying to rob. The Senator from Pennsylvania calls it embezzlement. The Senator from New York calls it thievery. We have the gall to call it "hard," "tough" choices. "Hard," "tough" choices. Pain, pain; oh, I have pain. Nonsense. They have been out there at Andrews eating so much ice cream that they all gained weight; they got fat out there. One of my friends told me, "I have to go on a diet." They took good care of pleasure boats, the pleasure craft.

Mr. FOWLER. Planes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, they took care of the private airplanes. They got all the little loopholes for oil exploration, and they fed the Japanese lobbyists by exempting electronics. And then they had the gall to come on the floor and cry: Pain; hard, tough choices; tough choices.

And by the way, they say, let us have a conference report here with no amendments, and 10 hours of debate. Like right now, you cannot offer an amendment; same act, same scene, same let us sweep it under the rug.

Well, we will watch that. We will watch that. But in any event what about waste, fraud, and abuse?

If you have spending of $400 billion, how are you going to cut that? Nobody in his right mind wants to cut spending by $400 billion in a $1.2 trillion budget. Even the Grace Commission report did not have that in mind.

Incidentally, in the last Grace report we got, in 1989, the President said that we have adopted 69 percent of the Grace Commissiion initiatives, and by now it is over 70 percent of the Grace Commission initiatives. And obviously, the Grace Commission initiatives are a matter of sound public policy.

Included in that astronomical amount, Grace was going to save out of defense, for example, were commissaries and post exchanges, the things that we put in there to attract people into the volunteer army. And otherwise, CHAMPUS, health care, according to the Grace Commission, is waste, fraud, and abuse.

So they can parrot that pollster nonsense of "I am against waste, fraud, and abuse," and "I am against taxes," and "Reelect me," but look honestly at the spending that you cannot and will not cut. We are not going to cut defense spending. According to the summit and every other plan, $292 billion is the Nunn figure for defense. We will not go below $292 billion for defense. And add in Desert Shield, and you have at least $300 billion or more.

I do not want to cut it, and the President does not want to cut it, and they will not be cutting it. So you have $300 billion budget defense. You have $200 billion for health costs. We would all like to control that. I could get elected President if I knew how to control it.

I have listened to everyone, and I still listen, but how do you keep those health-care costs from going up 11.5 percent each and every year? I want the best health care. I want the CAT scan when I get sick. I want all of the tests. Then, of course, they are suing the doctors, so the doctors require every conceivable test. The bills run up and up and away. So health costs are $200 billion, plus $300 billion for defense; that is $500 billion.

Then, of course, you have $263 billion for Social Security, and no one dares to cut that. There are the trust fund. We would do well to stop them from robbing it, much less cutting it. So they are not going to cut it. In addition, $286 billion in interest costs are projected. So now, adding it all up, we have spending of some $1.50 billion. So even if you eliminate all the rest of the Government—the President, the Congress, the courts, the FBI, the drug program, Commerce, Interior, Agriculture. Just eliminate the rest of Government, and you still have a deficit of some $200 billion.

So let us start talking sense. The American people have no idea about the magnitude of the task of getting this Government back in the black. I made one suggestion—I got eight votes for it in the Budget Committee—5-percent VAT tax, exemption food, housing, and health care. But they projected that out at the Congressional Budget Office. Even a VAT tax would take to the year 2021 to do the job.

So we have a serious, serious problem. They keep talking about the Democratic controlled Congress. Well, I saw Sununu this morning. He started palavering that political nonsense. He is the one controlling this Congress. The White House is watching Congress at every move. Why did we not get child care, clean air, CAFE standards, the textile bill? The Republicans over there, so well disciplined, upheld the FSX veto, the Hatch Act veto. We have had 15 up and down vetoes, and you cannot override them.

They have the control. So do not talk about a Democratic control. It is controlled at the executive level. He has the bully pulpit.

So don't talk any more about a Democratic-controlled Congress. We were ready last Thursday to take up Labor, Health and Human Resources. We had to wait for the minority to say when we could take it up. We waited all Thursday evening; we waited all Friday morning, and Friday afternoon. We were in here till midnight. I was here. We could have easily taken it up. But the minority tells you if you can even vote on Friday and on Monday. They just put two or three Senators on the floor, and they all go about politicking. We are a minority-controlled Congress.

I am against the filibuster rule. That is how strongly I feel about it now. We do not need extended debate. We can have, 1 hour, 2 hours. I came from the South, and we relied in the old days on the filibuster. My senior South Carolina colleague is the national champion.

But I can see now rather than making us the most deliberative body, the filibuster has undermined true deliberation. We have to change and move into the modern world of television.

Let us look this budget crisis in the face and understand it. In a capsule, Mr. President, we have trebled the national debt. The national debt right now is $3.2 trillion. It was $907 billion when President Reagan took office. It took all the previous Presidents, Republican and Democrat, 192 years of our history, all the wars, revolutions, civil, Spanish-American, World War I, World War II, Vietnam, Korea, all the wars, and we got our debt at a little over $900 billion. Now we are at $3.2 trillion after one President, plus one Vice President who is now President.

We added up all the new spending programs that have been proposed. We took Senator KENNEDY's health program for 1 year.

We took Senator DODD's child care program. We took DANNY QUAYLE'S go-to-Mars program; we took all the research programs; we took all the infrastructure programs, and it added up to only $19 billion. Yet we spent $27 billion this past year for nothing, just for added interest on the debt.

As I said, interest costs are now up to $286 billion. The House passed a budget for defense, of $283 billion.

They were saying that in several years interest cost would exceed defense. It already has. The interest costs exceed the defense budget.

Interest is eating us alive. We have gone from the biggest creditor to the biggest debtor nation in the world. The Europeans do not anymore consider the United States a safe haven. The dollar value is going down. We do not have a trade policy. We have a trade deficit of $100 billion plus each year. And we have basic institutional problems with the banks, the S&L's, the insurance companies, real estate, and right on down the list.

Incidentally, if this keeps up, by the next quarter—in the first part of December—we will have had two quarters of less than 1 percent growth, and you can then set aside Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. We put that proviso in the law. So we will have the technical recession I am fearful of, and that will be our refuge.

U.S per capita income is actually declining for the first time since World War II. And Federal spending is over $400 billion more than we are taking in.

The problem, then, if you are going to try to tackle it over 5 years, is not a $500 billion problem. The Comptroller General of the United States last month said to the summiteers it was $1 trillion problem. But the Congress, along with the President, said, we can solve the problem by disregarding half of it.

With this $1 trillion problem, that is why the Senator from South Carolina keeps counseling freezes and a VAT tax. Heavens above, I am not advocating this, because I like taxes and I am against Government. I am for Government, and I would like to see it work, and I have seen it work. I have seen this disaster build up over the past decade.

With a problem of this magnitude, the President needs to get out into the hinterlands and educate, sell, cajole, persuade, and come again and again and again and tell the American people exactly where we stand. Instead, he finally agrees, in the Rose Garden, to a budget agreement and sells it on TV for a mere 10 minutes. He claimed there is no smoke and there are no mirrors. He claimed we have not messed with Social Security. In truth, there are all kinds of smoke, all kinds of mirrors; and we rob $169 billion from the Social Security Trust Fund.

And he says, if the Soviets and the United States can get together, Republicans and Democrats can get together, as if we only have a political problem here. We have a national economic crisis, for rich, poor, for everyone. All of America is going to have to pitch in on this one and sacrifice.

I well remember Jack Kennedy's first inaugural, when he said, "The new frontier of which I speak is not a set of promises—it is a set of challenges. It sums up not what I intend to offer the American people, but what I intend to ask of them."

Compare Kennedy's Inaugural Address with George Bush's. Recall Kennedy's call to "challenges" and "new frontiers," then compare it to the most memorable line from George Bush's inaugural: "we have more will than wallet."

"We have more will than wallet." How ironic! In 1990, the United States stands as the world's only remaining superpower. We are the wealthiest Nation on the face of the Earth, endowed with unparalleled natural resources and the world's most productive workers. The U.S. economy is four times larger than it was at the end of World War II. Our per capita GNP is 2.3. times larger. And yet, today, our poor-mouthing President protests that we have "more will than wallet." He should be ashamed of himself.

In the 1930's America truly had more will than wallet, but our President, from his wheelchair, put the U.S. economy back on its feet.

In 1948 America had more will than wallet, but Harry Truman ignored the polls and pushed ahead with the Marshall plan for Europe and the Truman doctrine in Greece and Turkey.

In 1961 America had more will than wallet, but Kennedy summoned us to a New Frontier and a race to the Moon.

Throughout our history, we Americans have always had more will than wallet. But we moved forward and accomplished great things because of leaders with ambitious, progressive agendas for the Nation.

But today's President says we have more will than wallet. And, by the way, let us get a 25-percent writeoff if somebody buys stock, and let us have tax breaks for oil. We need incentives. The price of oil is up to $40 a barrel. We are ready to go to war for oil.

The distinguished Senator from Nevada put in CAFE standards, and it was vetoed. That is why we did not get even the beginning of an energy policy. The President put troops in the sands of Saudi Arabia but killed a CAFE standards bill that would have saved the equivalent of the production of Iraq and Kuwait.

He says we have more will than wallet, so let us just keep spending, and don't pay the bills.

Mr. President, look at this reconciliation bill. Like the summit agreement before it, it is half a haircut. You have a fellow 100 yards offshore, and you throw him a 50-yard lifeline and brag about how you are trying to save the man. Nonsense.

Nowhere in the media have I seen reported perhaps the most profound element of this latest incarnation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. It guts Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Heretofore, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has been premised on specific deficit targets aimed at achieving a balanced budget. That is now gone. In its place, this bill talks only about targets for proposed savings. In other words, in 1991 we only have to reach the proposed savings of $40 billion, and no one is supposed to notice or care that the deficit skyrockets to $253 billion. By 1995, the last year of the plan, even the wildly optimistic OMB projection foresees a $63 billion deficit—even after raiding the trust funds, factoring in rosy economic assumptions, and excluding S&L bailout costs. A more accurate deficit projection for 1995 would be closer to $200 billion. In other words, the deficit can continue to grow unchecked in each and every year of this plan, but as long as we reach our target for proposed savings, then we get to claim that we did our job. Perhaps nothing more clearly illustrates the inadequacy and sham of this bill.

There we go again, the same old smoke and the same old mirrors. The bill's economic assumptions are basicly sound for 1991, but the assumptions for 1992 through 1995 really put the rouge on old "Rosy Scenario." Consider 1992, when OMB says we will have robust GNP growth of 3.8 percent and interest rates at only 5.7 percent. Or consider 1995, when OMB promises us 3.5 percent economic growth and 4.2 percent interest rates. These are just not in the real world.

Meanwhile, a large portion of the Social Security, Medicare, highway, and airport trust funds will all be on budget for purposes of calculating the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit. The surpluses in those funds will be used in their entirety to fund the operating expenses of the Government.

Neatly tucked away in this bill is the fact that all expenditures for the S&L bailout will be off budget for purposes of calculating the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit. At the same time, the statutory debt limit is left open-ended and is extended for a full 5 years. When you put these two provisions together, what you have is congressional authorization of carte blanche for bailout spending by the Resolution Trust Corporation. RTC can spend whatever it needs to cover up its incompetent handling of the S&L liquidations. Those tens of billions won't count against the deficit, and they won't bring about a crisis in terms of exceeding the statutory debt limit. The purpose, of course, is to solve Congress' and the administration's political problems by keeping the S&L mess out of sight and out of mind.

They say, hard choices. They say, smoke and mirrors. But there is no truth to this. More to the point, Mr. President, this bill eliminates the function to the Congressional Budget Office, it eliminates the practical role of the Budget Committee, and it eliminates Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

I was bemused at the Budget Committe markup that every one of my colleagues on the Republican side said that we have to have reform of the process. The distinguished ranking member and former chairman, the Senator from New Mexico, said if he does not get this process, count him out.

Mr. President, this reconciliation bill is especially shameful in that it fails to address our changing national priorities. During the last year, our Nation has moved from the cold war to the trade war. We have a crying need for new investments in education and infrastructure in order to get our country moving and competitive. This bill offers a martial plan, not the domestic Marshall plan we desperately require.

I can tell you that the extremely low spending celings for domestic discretionary spending are not adequate to fund even current program obligations. Beyond that, the bill assumes zero new initiatives by the self-styled education President, environment President, child care President, and his like-minded colleagues in Congress.

Mr. President, this reconciliation bill presents us with a formula for a gridlock Congress and a do-nothing Government for the next 5 years. It also grants three-way veto authority to a willful minority in Congress. Take your pick from the Sununu veto, the Dole veto, and the Darman veto. The Sununu White House can exercise the traditional constitutional veto requiring 67 votes for override. The distinguished Republican leader, Senator DOLE, has his own veto power under the provision requiring a 60-vote point of order for any bill exceeding the spending caps. And Dick Darman has yet a third veto option by virtue of OMB's authority under the terms of this package to rule unilaterally on whether a given bill violates the spending caps.

Meanwhile, the Senate Budget Committee will be reduced to automatic pilot. It will be stripped of any meaningful role in establishing budget priorities, and will quickly fall into irrelevance.

As I said, Mr. President, this is a sure-fire formula for a deadlocked Congress and a do-nothing Government. That may be just fine in the eyes of the President without an agenda. But America deserves an agenda, and a leadership willing to pay for it.

Hopefully we will get out of this confrontation in the Middle East without further loss of life. I do not think Kuwait is worth it. Meanwhile, this bill officially kills any idea of a "peace dividend." Gone are the predictions of DOD's budget being pushed down toward $250 billion over the next several years. What's more, the cost of Desert Shield is not included under the DOD budget cap—it does not count against DOD's $292-plus billion spending limit. In other words, instead of a peace dividend to fund urgent domestic priorities, this bill awards the Pentagon a "war dividend" by exempting it from significant cuts and giving DOD carte blanche in the Persian Gulf.

Returning to the matter of the triple-veto provision in this bill, I would note that there have been those who have been very, very careful to stick up for the prerogatives of the congressional branch, to not weaken its power. They have opposed the line-item veto. I can tell you right now you do not have to worry about a line or an item because the executive branch now has three vetoes establishing minority control over this body.

You do not have to worry about November 6. If you can win the White House, you control government, and if you do not win the White House, then you have nothing.

Meanwhile, CBO can forget about giving us budget figures. This bill does not give CBO anything but the back of the hand. They say to CBO we do not want to hear from you. Just look at the so-called leadership amendment. It says OMB will be the authority and whatever OMB says, we will live by.

So, they effectively abolish the Congressional Budget Office. They effectively abolish the Budget Committee. All we are left with is, as they said yesterday, ministerial duties. I never heard of that particular role.

There was no reason, in my opinion, for not fully discussing this matter in committee. Conscientiously I would want the chairman and ranking member to discuss all of this with my Budget Committee members, because section 306 of the Budget Act envisions just that, that none of these things would come out that were not considered within the Budget Committee.

Now they are going to fall back on a technicality and say that the bill came out of the Budget Committee, but when the bill was in committee they said we cannot discuss it because we could not instruct the authorizers. They instructed me on Coast Guard, and instructed me on several other things as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation. Why not instruct the budget process reform to the Budget Committee? You could not discuss it and now they do not want you to amend it because they just want opening statements until they get it all greased. As a result we have done away with the Budget Committee save for ministerial duties, as they call it. We will raise a point of order and then of course finally we have done away with, I guess, the Congress itself.

You effectively eliminate CBO, OMB, and the Budget Committee, and you include provisions which say that "such and such shall be held harmless for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings." That is a rhetorical way of abolishing Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I know my distinguished chairman does not like Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. He does not like me saying that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings got them to the summit, which it did when I raised the point of order on putting the S&L bailout off budget.

The premise of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was truth in budgeting. Everybody was supposed to see everything on top of the table, and then we could all make sound judgments. We would consider it in the open. We debated taxes in the open, in markups in the Budget Committee.

But instead they went to the summit and in secret all pledged not to discuss the deal in public, and I can see why. As a result, of course, the majority of Democrats and majority of Republicans turned the summit deal down.

Mr. President, I will vote against the Senate reconciliation bill. I take no pride in this negative vote. Quite frankly, I have been chomping at the bit to find a budget package that I can vote for, a budget package that addresses the magnitude of the problem and that offers some promise of actually balancing the budget over a 5-year period. This bill fails on all counts.

Indeed, this bill is next-of-kin to the original, discredited summit package, and it displays all the same warts and deformities of the earlier version. It continues to ransack the Social Security trust fund. It puts spending for the S&L bailout off budget—out of sight and out of mind. It leaves defense spending virtually untouched and sacrosanct, while hog-tying domestic discretionary spending in a 3-year-straitjacket, meaning that we can forget about any new initiatives to improve education, to rebuild infrastructure, to boost competitiveness. This package is all pain and no gain. It raises the debt limit by $1.9 billion, which gives us a good idea of the magnitude of additional deficit spending which is expected over the next 5 years. And it will still leave us with a whopping deficit in 1995. So what is the purpose of this exercise?

Mr. President, Senators are well aware of my efforts in recent weeks to advance my own budget freeze plan designed to accomplish the consensus objective of saving $50 billion in 1991 and $500 billion over 5 years. More importantly, for years now I have urged freeze plans and a value-added tax which would go well beyond that limited objective by actually balancing the budget over the same timeframe. So I have sought to be constructive, but I refuse to capitulate on my fundamental insistence that we produce a deficit-reduction package that is real, and that will get the job done. At this point, I believe I can best serve the Senate by sticking to my guns. The inadequacy of this package will be abundantly manifest within a matter of months. Deficit forecasts will skyrocket. Our foreign creditors, looking inward in the case of the Japanese and looking eastward in the case of the Europeans, will refuse to continue financing our run-away deficits. At that point, Congress and the President will at long last be ready for a budget freeze and a value-added tax which, together, will move this country toward a balanced budget in short order. I am prepared to lead that effort, to pay whatever political cost is involved in selling and administering that bitter medicine. But I cannot support the present, entirely inadequate measure.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. SASSER. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Nevada 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and the able and distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee. I shall confine my comments to the minimum allocation provisions in the proposed new gasoline taxes that are to be imposed by the bill, and I associate myself with the comments made earlier this morning by the distinguished senior Senator from Montana, Senator BAUCUS.

Mr. President, I object to the 95 percent minimum allocation provisions on two grounds. First, I believe the proposal would undermine our national transportation policy. Second, and I believe this is more important today, it is very clear that a change in the minimum allocation formula has nothing to do with deficit reduction and should be considered in the broader context of the highway reauthorization bill to be debated next year.

Mr. President, it has been more than three decades since the Congress passed the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956, which authorized the largest Federal highway construction program in our Nation's history.

The centerpiece of our highway program has long been the acknowledgement that we all as Americans benefit from the construction and maintenance of a truly National Highway System. Since the highway system is funded through excise taxes, it is inevitable that some States will contribute more, other States will contribute less. It is also inevitable that some States will require more funds than others because of the nature of their individual situation.

Let me cite my own State of Nevada as an example. Due to its large land area and relatively small population, we spend $1.37 in Federal highway funds for every dollar we collect for the trust fund. The role of bridge States, such as Nevada, is critical to efficient transcontinental highway traffic for both commercial and passenger vehicles.

I might note, Mr. President, this is not simply a concern of those of us in the West. The table that has been provided to us indicates that some 27 States would be net losers under the proposed 95-percent minimal allocation formula. From the South, Alabama is affected, to New England, Vermont is affected. It has a bicoastal impact, Massachusetts, on the Atlantic, Washington on the Pacific; large States and small States in population, from New York to the Dakotas, both North and South Dakota, will be adversely affected.

It has been argued that the Federal interstate system is nearly completed. And that is true. But we also must recognize, taking pride as we do in its construction, that it is one thing to build, yet another thing to maintain. We need now to continue that commitment, Mr. President, to maintain this system.

Throughout the country, federally funded highways are in dire need of repair. In my own home State of Nevada there are portions of our interstate system which will need to be closed to traffic if substantial repairs are not made in the next few years.

My State cannot afford to maintain its share of the Federal highway system on its own. A recent study found that the State of Nevada and local governments need to spend more than $6 billion over the next decade to preserve our State-funded road system. There are 161 bridges and 25,724 miles of roads that need immediate improvement.

Mr. President, we have identified only $2½ billion in expected and anticipated revenue under the present revenue system, $3.8 billion less than the amount needed. Lest there be any conclusion that Nevada is not imposing upon its own citizens a reasonable gas tax, Mr. President, let me point out that the State of Nevada has the highest gasoline taxes in America. To add the burden of increased responsibility for our Federal road system would be impossible in light of these heavy responsibilities and financial commitments made by the citizens of my own State. The continued cost sharing between our States is essential to protect our national interests.

It has been argued that no one will lose under the proposed 95-percent minimum allocation formula. The new formula is ostensibly only supposed to apply to the new gas taxes which will be imposed by this measure. The reality, however, is that many States will face a relative loss of funds under this formula.

While it is true that every State may conceivably receive additional funding, such States as Nevada would receive less than they otherwise would receive under the present 85-percent formula.

Mr. President, I also note that, under the tables being circulated that make the assumptions that increased highway funds will be made available, the formulas that are contemplated do not allow for a substantial increase in the obligation limits. It is the present obligation limits that cause a buildup in the Federal highway trust fund of nearly $11 billion and prevent the States from spending the money that presently is in the trust fund and that has been collected from motorists who travel along our highways.

I am encouraged that both the House and the Senate transportation appropriation bills include some increases in these obligation limits, but any possible increases in highway funding over the next few years can easily be covered by the current $11 billion surplus.

While the definition of which highway spending will be attributed to the new gas tax is unclear, it seems unlikely in fact that any of the funds derived from the new tax will actually be spent on highway improvements over the next 5 years.

The timing of the 95-percent minimum allocation proposal is simply inappropriate. Never before have changes in our highway allocation formulas been made as part of the budget reconciliation process. In addition, highway allocation formulas have always been under the jurisdiction of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee. The 95-percent minimum allocation provision was reported to the Budget Committee by the Senate Finance Committee. While the Finance Committee does have some jurisdiction over all the trust fund, the historical record clearly establishes that the Environment and Public Works Committee is the committee which enjoys plenary jurisdiction over the division of the highway funds between the States. Any change in the minimum allocation formula needs to be addressed in the context of next year's highway reauthorization funds.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list of the 27 States that will be adversely impacted by the 95-percent minimum allocation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOSERS UNDER 95 PERCENT MINIMUM ALLOCATION

Alabama, Alaska, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

Mr. BRYAN. I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas for the purpose of a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS). The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BENTSEN. There has been a lot of debate here this morning about the minimum allocation provision. Let me state that from the very inception of the highway program, my State of Texas has been a donor State. And we could understand that. There was a reason to have donors and donees. One of the reasons is that you go across a State like Nevada, which did not have that much population, or you go across States like Montana and Idaho, and in many of those instances, it required very expensive construction to push through mountains, spending an extraordinary amount of money per mile. It was justified, and we did it it.

But now the interstate is 99.3 percent complete—99.3 percent complete. It is not yet complete in my State, however. At some point, this business of some States getting $2.50 for every dollar they send to the trust fund has to end. And the logical time for it to end is when the interstate is finished.

We had a problem in trying to get the people of the South and the West to vote for an additional gasoline tax even though we know that helps conservation, and even though half of it is going to the deficit. The one-half that was left was going to the highway trust fund. It was important to be able to go back to your State and to say to those people who were from donor States: "You are going to get 95 percent of it back. It won't be as bad as it has been in the past, you still won't get all your money back but it won't be as bad." As to the other States which are going to get more than they send in, to further protect those States, the provision will hold them harmless. It says on the 9 cents of gasoline tax that is now on the books, you will continue to get 85 percent back. For those States that get $2.50 for every dollar you send, you will continue to get that on the 9 cents.

But what we are talking about is the additional revenue for highways coming from the gas tax increase and on that you still have more money for your States. You will get back a minimum of 95 percent of it, at a minimum. And, in addition, you will be able to share in that extra 5 percent of funds not going to donor States. That is what we are talking about.

I understand the realities. I understand that there are at least 27 of those States that get more than they send in, and there are only 23 of us that would be donor States under the provision. I understand how those economic interests prevail and how those that have been getting more than they send, more than their people pay in Federal gas taxes, I know they are going to want to continue that kind of a situation. There will still be donor and donee States. But at some point—and it seems to me that the time is now, as we have this increase in the gas tax—we must try to bring some justice and equity into the funding equation as we are finishing up the interstate.

Maintenance costs? Of course there are maintenance costs. Donor States have them and donee States have them. But the big difference in costs, in cutting roads through mountain States, that has been taken care of in the first phase of the highway program now coming to an end.

My State, Texas, is now at the bottom of the heap, along with Wisconsin, North Carolina, and Oklahoma, and it may always be there. But at least we ought to get that minimum allocation up to where there is more equity in it now that the interstate is virtually completed.

I hope the Senators and their staffs would take a look at some material prepared for me by the FHWA. When my colleagues see it, they will realize this proposal is beneficial. It provides some equity and fairness. I urge Senators to support it.

We shoulder a disproportionate share of this tax in the South and in some Western States. We drive more and we drive farther than others. We have to because of the distances involved. That is why I urge my colleagues to look at these numbers, look at this provision and see how much their States benefit or at least are held harmless by it.

I urge my colleagues to support provisions on minimum allocation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee to yield to me 10 minutes?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield, to the Senator from Montana, 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, all of us in the Senate have the highest regard for the Senator from Texas, the chairman of the Finance Committee. He obviously feels very strongly about the minimum allocation provision that is in the reconciliation bill.

This is a matter which is often contested. It is contested whenever the highway authorization bill comes before the Congress. It was addressed in 1983. At that date the Environment and Public Works Committee changed the minimum allocation formula in a way that would benefit more States—I see the Senator rises to ask a question. I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BENTSEN. I will tell my colleague who the Senator was who changed it.

Mr. BAUCUS. I have a good idea who it was.

Mr. BENTSEN. You are looking at him. My State was getting back 55 cents on the dollar and I urged we get it up to 85.

I yield.

Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator is correct. The present formula is 85 percent and generally there are about 19 States who benefit under that formula.

But the main point, Mr. President, is this. This is a matter which is contested on occasion. When it is, it is contested in the committee. When the debate on the highway bill comes before the Environment and Public Works Committee, that same debate will come next year when the highway authorization comes up again.

The present highway authorization program that distributes dollars among States for highway construction and maintenance expires next year, in 1991. So next year in 1991 this Congress will again face the question what should the allocation be, what should the formula be, how many dollars go to which States for what purposes of highway construction and maintenance. Next year is when it should come before the Congress, if at all: in the ordinary course of business, in the committee that has jurisdiction, the Environment and Public Works Committee.

It is my view, and I think it is the view of a good number of Senators, that we should get on with the business of budget reconciliation, we should get on with the business of budget deficit reduction, we should do all we can to reduce the deficit by as much as we can, and as fairly as we possibly can, so the burden of deficit reduction is felt evenly and fairly all across our country. That is the goal here, and we are trying mightily to achieve that goal so we can pass the resolution and adjourn and go home. That should be our goal.

I therefore think we should not be involved in adding provisions in the budget reconciliation bill which have nothing to do with budget deficit reduction. That is, we should not be adding in provisions which go to policy, which change formula allocation, but have nothing to do with budget deficit reduction.

So that is one reason I urge us to come up with a solution here that strikes from the reconciliation bill the change in the minimum allocation formula which has the effect of massively transferring dollars away from approximately 27 States in favor of approximately 23 States. We should not be involved in this massive change in highway funding distribution.

A few days ago the distinguished chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, Mr. BURDICK, introduced a resolution with 32 cosponsors asking the Senate to go on record saying this matter, the change in the minimum allocation formula, properly is in the jurisdiction of his committee, the Environment and Public Works Committee, and we should not be addressing it at this time.

Also there are various letters in circulation, signed by various Senators, making this same point: this matter should not be brought up this year; it should be considered next year in the appropriate authorizing committee.

There have been no hearings on this issue. There have been no deliberations. It is just a formula change that was inserted in the reconciliation. Because this matter is so important, and because Senators on both sides have such passionately held views on this matter, it seems only fair there should be hearings before this matter is addressed one way or the other.

This question of the minimum allocation provision is always in contest with the House. It is always a matter that is debated with the other body; and the Senate, this body, uses the lower percentage figure as a bargaining chip with the other body in conference to come up with a conference report that addresses the proper formula in the distribution of dollars.

So if we, at this point, enact this minimum allocation formula change, we in the Senate will be giving up a bargaining chip when we negotiate in conference with the House.

We all know next year when the highway authorization comes up, when we in the Senate finally pass our bill dealing with this subject, we then go to conference with the other body and the other body will have a formula change which tilts highway distribution even more in favor of populous parts of the country, even more at the expense of thinly populated parts of this country.

We should not give up that bargaining chip. We should not be making those decisions now.

Finally, Mr. President, our highways, our interstate system is a national system. The distinguished chairman of the committee is accurate when he says the Interstate Highway System is practically complete. He used the figure 99.3 percent and I suspect that figure is accurate. But that begs the issue.

Even though the Interstate Highway System is for all intents and purposes complete, I do not think we want to walk away from that investment. We still have to maintain those highways. We still have to repave them. We have to keep them in good operating shape.

There are many States today, the thinly populated States, which are having a devil of a time trying to maintain their existing highways.

My own State of Montana and many other Western States have State gasoline taxes much higher than the national average. Montana's State gasoline tax is 20 cents per gallon. It is one of the highest in the Nation. We are forced to raise our gasoline taxes in our State in order to try to maintain our highways in as good shape as we possibly can. Still, we are having a hard time keeping up.

The Interstate Highway System, the primary system in this country, is a national system.

Those of you who live in Eastern States and more populous States like to take vacations; you like to drive across our country. You would like to go to Yosemite; you want to drive some summer to Yellowstone or Glacier Park in my State; you want to drive across the country to visit relatives, and you want to drive on national highways that you can depend upon. This is a national program.

Those of us in business transport products across the country and would like an interstate system that works, a primary system that is a national system, so that we know if we are driving across one State and we get to the next State, we can depend upon highways; that they are, by and large, as good as they were in the last State.

I submit, Mr. President, if we change this highway allocation formula today, Americans are going to have a quiltwork, patchy highway system in this country. Some will have great highways. Others will have highways that are not quite so good; a lot of pot holes, a lot of chuckholes. Those of us in Montana know we have a checkerboard land pattern in this country in Federal lands, unfortunately. If changes such as this are approved, we are going to have a checkerboard highway program. We cannot have a checkerboard highway program in this country. This is a national program.

When we add it all up, for a countless number of reasons, this provision should not be in this bill. The Finance Committee has no jurisdiction.

I see the distinguished chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee on the floor. The distinguished chairman submitted a resolution with 32 cosponsors asking the Senate to go on record as saying that the proper committee, the proper time to deal with this matter, is in the Environment and Public Works Committee when that highway authorization bill is before the distinguished chairman's committee.

We also should not go down the road, Mr. President, of beginning to add extraneous matters. There may be other amendments later on today and tomorrow that will add extraneous matters. I think most Senators would not like to add extraneous matters to this budget reconciliation bill.

Mr. President, I strongly urge all Members, depending upon the parliamentary situation we find ourselves in, to resist the inclusion of the minimum allocation provision. It should not be in the bill.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I raise a point of order under subsection (d)(1)(C) of section 20001 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 against section 7405 (J) on pages 353 and 354 of the bill.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator PRESSLER be permitted to speak for 3 minutes before the Chair rules on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAUCUS. Reserving the right to object. I ask unanimous consent to add several other cosponsors joining me in making my point of order, in addition to Senator PRESSLER.

Mr. President, joining me along with Senator PRESSLER are Senators REID, SYMMS, CONRAD, BRYAN, LAUTENBERG, DOMENICI, and the distinguished chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, Senator BURDICK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection that the Senator from South Dakota be recognized for 2 minutes?

Mr. DOMENICI. For 3 minutes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For 3 minutes. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I think this issue is an important one to the smaller States. As I have said earlier, the proper place for this is in the Environment and Public Works Committee. The large States want a highway formula based on population. The small States want a highway formula based on a combination of population and length and miles of roads. It is a fairness issue to the small States.

In the Federalist Papers, written by the Forefathers of our Constitution, it was pointed out the need to have a Senate where the small States would have a fair chance. This is a classic example of that. This is the same point of order and the same amendment I proposed and spoke about on the Senate floor for the past week.

I am happy that this is getting done. I am very pleased to join in it because next year we will be writing the 5-year highway bill. The formula will be written. There will be a battle between the House and the Senate. The House will come forth with a formula very favorable to the big States. The Senate will come forth with a formula more favorable to the smaller States.

I have been a leader in fighting for the small States in terms of the highway trust fund formula. I urge that the point of order that has been raised be interpreted in such a way as to strike what the Finance Committee has done, as a matter of fairness to States such as South Dakota.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise to join my colleague from Montana in making a point of order against section 7405(j) of the bill—the minimum allocation formula for the distribution of Federal highway funds. I am strongly opposed to this provision in the finance title of the Reconciliation Act altering the minimum allocation on extra highway funds from 85 to 95 percent.

My opposition is based on three points. First, it is not within the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee; second, it does not alter revenues or outlays, and third, it is unfair to a majority of the States.

Jurisdiction. What the Finance Committee is doing is wrong. The issue of minimum allocation is not within their jurisdiction. It is within the jurisdiction of the Environment and Public Works Committee. The committee which has always had jurisdiction over the issue. The Environment Committee will take up highway reauthorization next year when it can deal with this and all other highway issues in a comprehensive manner.

If the Senate retains this provision, an important bargaining chip will be thrown away. For years, the House and some big States have been trying to change the highway program. It is now a national program. Some States put in more than they get out. If this were not the case, States like Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Massachusetts, and many others would never have the funds to build and maintain an adequate road system. This would be a blow to interstate commerce.

There are thousands of miles of roads in my State. They are used regularly by Nevadans. But they are also used by tourists from many States and by trucks and other freight carriers passing through Nevada to other States. In other words, the whole Nation benefits from the roads crisscrossing our States and all other States. Nevada could never on its own pay to maintain this road network. It needs help from its fellow States. And the Highway Act recognizes this need through a formula that currently provides Nevada $1.37 in funds for every dollar it donates. Changing this formula would make it difficult for Nevada to maintain its share of the national road network.

This issue, and all other highway issues will be debated at great length when Congress reauthorizes the Highway Act. There will be tradeoffs at that time and this may be one. But if it is lost now, then the Senate goes into the reauthorization process with a weaker position. The Environment Committee and the Senate ought to have the chance to save all of its bargaining chips for next year's battle which promises to be bitter and decisive.

Effect on revenue. This provision does not belong in the finance section of the package for jurisdictional reasons. It is unfair to most States as I will explain below. And it has no effect on the deficit.

The minimum allocation only affects the distribution of highway funds. It does not raise taxes or spend the funds. Those provisions are elsewhere in the reconciliation package and other existing legislation. Since the provision has no effect on the deficit, it should be struck for that reason.

Fairness. But the most compelling argument of all is the unfairness of this money grab.

Changing the minimum allocation formula benefits only 23 States. Some may try to tell you no one loses because of this change. This is simply not true. According to the Federal Highway Administration, increasing highway revenues by $5 billion under the 85-percent formula will mean $680 million more for all the States. Changing the formula to 95 percent means half the amount goes to 50 States, with the other half dedicated to the other 23—27 States lose to 23. How is this fair?

This means a total loss of $345 million and a loss of $2.2 million to Nevada. Not a lot in some other States, but a lot in Nevada. We need every penny we can get. A penny increase in the State gas tax brings in $6 million, while the Federal gas tax brings in $8.2 million per penny increase. We should get our fair and historic share of any increase.
